The U-S Department of Agriculture's monthly report on food supplies says turkey will be plentiful in September. With a new crop coming to market and large quantities in storage, supplies should average about six percent more than last September.

Beef will continue in plentiful supply with production levels surpassing record levels a year ago.

According to the U-S-D-A report, fresh Bartlett pears and potatoes will also continue plentiful into the fall season.

Other foods seen as plentiful include broiler-fryers, dry onions, grapes, non-fat dry milk, dried prunes and raisins. Frozen and canned vegetables, including canned sweet corn, green peas, tomatoes and tomato products, and nuts, rice and dry beans will also be abundant.

The report says supplies of pork are increasing over the light supplies of a year ago. Other foods expected to be in adequate supply include eggs and dairy products.
