Old hat to some, new to us

Daily Issue Debate Continues

YOUR SEPTEMBER ISSUE was very informative. As president of the University of Minnesota Band (1931) the story on the China trip brought back memories related to the band's aborted trip to Europe in 1929 and the substitute journey to the southern United States in 1930.

The account of the Minnesota Daily episode ("Staving off a Daily Disaster, September 1980), may have been old hat to those living in the area but of great interest to those of us who have not heard the details. I conclude that irresponsible people both in college papers and in the public press are causing increasing pressure for curbing the freedom which they abuse.

Harold Shipman, '37

Responsible Press Needed

IN RESPONSE TO the editor's note on page 25 in the September issue, may I say keeping us informed and reprinting the excerpts from the "humor" issue are not synonymous. Most of us are interested in the outcome of the case and are hoping students will not be forced to support that type of publication.

The decision, however, to reprint the first page and the excerpts from the "Daily Inquirer" in a magazine for the alumni of any college, in my opinion, shows a lack of good judgment. To have it reprinted in the Minnesota Alumni Association's publication is inexcusable. If that is a representative sample of the content of the "humor" issue, the "critics" who label it ". . . racist, obscene, sexist and sacrilegious . . ." were rating it too highly.

Although I find little justification for the amount of space allotted to Bill Norton's analysis, I do want to congratulate the typists who refused to set the stories in print. It would have been nice if your staff had refused to do the reprint.

Freedom of the press is fine but it must be accompanied by responsibility. As a member of the MAA and a reader of Minnesota, I too have some rights and freedoms. I believe I have the right to expect an alumni publication to be free of profanity and obscene language. I also have a responsibility to see that my dues are not used to support a publication which does not meet those standards.

Edna D. Williams, '47
Sioux City, Iowa

Editor's Note: We will use objectionable language only when we think it is an essential part of the story as we believe it was in this issue. Our standard procedure is not to use obscenities, profanities, or vulgarities.

Book Removal Sought

I WAS VERY INTERESTED in "Staving Off a Daily Disaster," pp. 20-25 in the September 1980 Minnesota. I have never seen a copy of the "humor issue" that caused all the problems, which I have followed ever since the matter first erupted, and would very much like to have a copy if any are available.

My interest comes from the fact the administration at my school has requested that I not use a certain textbook this fall. Never before has my selection of books been even questioned. They made it very clear that they were not censoring it, and that they would not forbid me to use the book, but they also made it very clear that it would be very unwise for me not to decide not to use the book.

I would, therefore, very much like to see what similarities there might be in the humor issue of the Daily and the book I have now removed from my required list. If there is any way I could get a copy, I would appreciate having one.

Light 1,000 Miles Away

THANKS FOR THE Kate Stanley/humor issue piece. To an alumna who lives more than 1,000 miles away, it was, at last, some light at the end of the tunnel in explaining the initial controversy and its outcomes after one year. Please keep us posted regarding the suit.

Kathleen Holmay, '67, '78

Fee Properly Abolished

ABOUT THE SIX-PAGE, five-picture spread on the Minnesota Daily and your request for comment!

Yes, Mr. Editor, some of us — probably a large number of us — are sick and tired of the Daily's efforts to represent its troubles as a "disaster" for free speech and press.

Free speech and free press are not the issues in this controversy. In their name, let the Daily be as vulgar as the four-letter-word vocabulary of its writers requires; let it be blasphemous in its self-proclaimed search for truth; let it be used for playing dirty tricks by political factions vying for its editorship. Its coterie of sophomoric editors will still not be satisfied.

What the Daily really wants is to have the University force students and their fee- and tax-paying-parents to support vulgarity, which is an insult to their good taste and blasphemy in which they do not wish to join.

The compulsory fee subscription was properly abolished. The forced perusal of the Daily for the University's official notices should go the same way.

Unable to Decide

IN FACT I WAS pleased — not annoyed — to read the article "Staving Off a Daily Disaster" because I have not heard the particulars outlined.

Since I did not see the Daily humor issue, I am unable to decide whether I would have been as enraged as many were. I quite agree with reader Welch who feels that the Daily should be received by each student. To make the Daily completely self-supporting seems a "knee jerk" action and indeed appears to violate First Amendment guarantees on the part of the Board of Regents and legislature.

Obviously my distance may influence my view, but truly the Legislature and right-wing tendencies of late seem to be manufacturing a tempest in a teapot.

Mavis E. Buchholz, '70
San Francisco

Look Homeward, Al

I ENJOYED THE EDITORIAL ("Milgrom, Not Reagan, Film Star, September 1980). A slight correction is in order, however, as I attended high school with Al Milgrom at Pine City, Minn. where he starred in football, basketball, track and other extracurricular activities. The pride of ones' hometown can't be overlooked, and we can't have the metropolis of Minnesota usurping Pine City's part in his early development.

Undoubtedly, his visits to the Family Theater in Pine City planted the seed for his present vocation. Another case of the small town boy making good.

Dennis Johnson, DDS, '46

Low Profile Raised

YOUR MORE THAN generous spread in the September issue is going to ruin the low profile I've been wanting to try to keep here all these years, especially with Republicans because — let's face it — Ronnie is really the star. Anyway, thanks for the nice coverage, though I hate to arouse professional jealousies around the area.

Admires Sonia Johnson

AS A FRIEND OF Sonia Johnson, thank you for the article ("Sonia's Grinding Emotional Ordeal," March 1980) and the excellent photograph of her.

I have known and admired her for many years for her work as a supportive wife, an excellent mother and an educational consultant.

I admire her even more for having the courage to withstand vicious attacks.

As a woman who has had to withstand, and sometimes submit, to the male-dominated society, the inequalities of pay, promotion, and so on, I have appreciated the stand taken by Sonia Johnson as well as many other women who are continuing to ask for equal pay for equal work, equal treatment in jobs, and continued betterment of working conditions for all women as well as minorities.

She's been answering questions for 20 years

Questions? Ask Gen Cole

Genevieve Cole answers questions in her Williamson Hall office.

“WHERE IS ROOM 140?”
“Can I get a CLA bulletin here?”

“Is this lost and found?”

Genevieve Cole probably answers more questions each working hour than any other University of Minnesota employee.

“I want a degree in math. Where can I get one?”

She has been answering questions nonstop for nearly 20 years. She answers sensible questions and stupid questions in the same kindly manner. She is understanding and unflappable.

“When do we get our grades for spring quarter?”

After so much practice, she handles questions with such deftness and skill that one is re-mindful of Chinese acrobatics or close-order drill.

“Do you have a Coffman calendar?”

She is a senior office specialist in Admissions and Records on the Twin Cities campus. She is perhaps better known as Mrs. Cole, the wise woman behind the glass at the information booth in Williamson Hall.

“This is quite an intriguing building, but I still feel sentimental about my old spot in Morrill Hall. I was there for a long-time, you know,” said the native of the Twin Cities.

Her job was a little tougher when she was working in Morrill Hall. Eight phone lines “rang incessantly” and lines of questioners tended to form. “Here it isn’t so busy,” she said.

She started working for the University in 1953. She spent nine years as a mail clerk before taking her current job.

“This job takes a lot of patience and understanding,” she said.

“It sure does,” observed an eavesdropping customer. “I’ve already given you enough trouble.”

“You have to like people and be able to work with the public,” she said. “It is challenging and rewarding to help someone with a frustrating problem.”

Actually she does a little counseling and advising when she isn’t directing traffic. “I’ve learned all the majors and have nearly all the academic bulletins at my disposal. I get involved with admissions, current registration, and returning students.

“This is also the lost and found for identification cards. When I get one I send out a postcard notifying the student.”

“Hi!” interjected another customer. “I got a postcard saying that I could pick up my ID card here.”

“It’s just amazing how much you do here,” Mrs. Cole said. “But I love it. One student told me I looked the same after eight years, even better. He said I have beautiful character lines. Now wasn’t that nice?” Bill Hoffman

Emery Receives Journalism Awards

EDWIN EMERY, professor of journalism at the University of Minnesota, has received two national awards for research and teaching.

At the recent national convention of the Association for Education in Journalism Emery was presented the Willard G. Bleyer Award for his contribution to research in the history of journalism. Emery is the author of the standard textbook on American journalism history, “The Press and America,” now in its fourth edition. The book was first published in 1954. Emery was the second recipient of the Bleyer award, named for a pioneer University of Wisconsin journalism historian.

TOM FOLEY

Emery will be presented the 1980 Distinguished Teaching in Journalism Award of Sigma Delta Chi, the society of professional journalists, at the society's national convention in Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 20 in honor of 35 years of teaching.

Emery returned to Minnesota this fall after a year's sabbatical during which he taught at Nanyang University in Singapore. Paul Dienhart

Health, Law Faculty Nix Bargaining Unit

THE HEALTH SCIENCES faculty on the Duluth and Twin Cities campuses and the Law School faculty have voted to opt out of the state's designated collective bargaining units for the University of Minnesota.

In April the state legislature amended the Public Employment Labor Relations Act (PELRA) to create 12 collective bargaining units for employees at the University of Minnesota. Teaching personnel at the University were placed into single units on the Twin Cities or Duluth campus. There are currently no union representatives for University faculty.

Representatives of faculty union organizations had lobbied at the legislature for separate units for Law School and health sciences faculty, and succeeded in getting the bill revised to allow the law and health sciences faculties to opt out of the campus-wide units.

The Law School, all of whose faculty members are on the Twin Cities campus, voted 30-2 not to join the bargaining unit. The health sciences faculty of the Twin Cities and Duluth voted together, and rejected the unit 443 to 347.

The Duluth faculty has already voted to bargain collectively. The June results showed 145 votes for the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), 134 votes for the University of Minnesota-Duluth Education Association (UMDEA), and 34 votes for no agent.

Faculty on the Twin Cities campus — minus the Law School and health sciences faculties — are tentatively expected to vote on collective bargaining early next year, Perry said. The BMS is currently preparing a list of eligible voters on the Twin Cities campus. Paul Dienhart

Briefs . . .

ALL UNIT HEADS have been informed of the budget cuts they can expect: final figures will be set following regents' review. Three different formulas have been used, depending on the type of unit, to determine cuts. State specials, not retrenched in previous years, will take deepest cuts. Academic units will be cut a little more than 1% on the average . . . President Magrath was at the White House Sept. 16 for a meeting with VP Mondale and Frank Press, President Carter's science and technology adviser. Magrath and about 20 other leaders in higher education were invited to discuss ways that government, industries, and universities can cooperate to achieve technological advances . . . Senate Consultative Committee Chairwoman Marcia Eaton has listed issues the SCC can expect to be concerned with this year: budget, senate reorganization, Rajender case and consent decree, revised proposal on academic staff ("E track"), sexual harassment, monitoring of 1-year experiment on refundable Daily fees, several others . . . U state fair exhibit won a blue ribbon for outstanding exhibit for 2nd year in a row . . . Faculty have asked for a grant of up to $5,000 to develop a proposal for treating problems in the developing world through a program of the Midwest Universities Consortium for International Activities. Areas include nutrition, energy, appropriate technology, human resources development, health care delivery . . . A record was predicted for fall enrollment . . . Transit Services is sponsoring a free car pool program again this year. Participation in the first computer run has already matched last year's participation of about 1,200 commuters . . . Dean Lilly of CBA, honored by the Minnesota Broadcasters Association as the 1980 "Outstanding Minnesotan," made a strong appeal to the group for support of the "U" as a whole. In a speech in Duluth accepting the award, Lilly said that "nurturing research at the University, even in the face of inflation and falling enrollments, is good business." . . . Gerald Peterson, 46, senior scientist in the School of Physics and Astronomy, and his wife were killed in an automobile accident September 7. Peterson started working at the "U" as a student in 1958 and began working in a civil service job in 1962. Maureen Smith

At 47, the 11th president begins his seventh year

Portrait: C. Peter Magrath

Photography by Avis Mandel

WHEN CLAUDE PETER MAGRATH (pronounced MA-GRAH, he insists, as the Irish do) was appointed the 11th president of the University of Minnesota in 1974, he was just 40 years old. Only William Watts Folwell, the University's first president, was younger at the time of his appointment in 1869. Folwell was 36.

Magrath took over administration of the University in the wake of the forced resignation of his predecessor, Malcolm Moos. The grey-haired and soft-spoken Moos, although popular with students for his restraint in handling campus disturbances during the Vietnam War era, had fallen from favor with faculty, administrators and regents largely because of his inability to avert repeated cuts in state appropriations. Magrath is generally credited with re-establishing good relations with the legislature, though, the University is faced this year with its largest budget cut ever — $14.1 million — ordered by Gov. Al Quie because of a shortfall in state revenues. Projected enrollment declines during the next few years threaten to further reduce funds; but despite these problems, Magrath says he has not lost his enthusiasm for the job, and has no career plans beyond it.

"I'm ambitious to do as good a job as I can for the University of Minnesota right now. I love this place," he says.

"I have no personal career plans — I can't exclude anything — but I don't have any plans. I think about the only sensible attitude . . . is to literally take about one year at a time," he says, noting that he serves at the pleasure, ultimately, of the Board of Regents and the University community.

"If I get beaten down on the job, I bounce back pretty quickly because my personal life is far more important to me than my public life. When that's in order, everything falls into a very nice perspective because I know who I am. I'm very happily married and I put that before and after everything else."

When asked whether he has ever considered seeking elective office, Magrath concedes: "It's crossed my mind, but it's only been my mind that it's crossed and not anybody else's . . . I'm not politically active. I can't be, nor do I want to be while I'm in this position. It would degrade the University. It would be inappropriate and I have no ambitions to run for elective office. I've got plenty of aspects of public office in the job I've got right now."

Although not running for office, he does run and calls it "a compulsion." That view is obviously shared by his wife, Diane Skomars Magrath.

"He runs!" she says simply, struggling to explain the significance of that seemingly uncomplicated preoccupation. "It's very, very, important to him. I can't tell you how important that is to him," she says, but then remembers a circumstance to illustrate her point.

"When we were at the cabin this summer he fell off a ladder trying to get a tree limb down, and he injured his knee and, oh, he was a bear to live with. He's really crabby if he can't run, it really means that much.

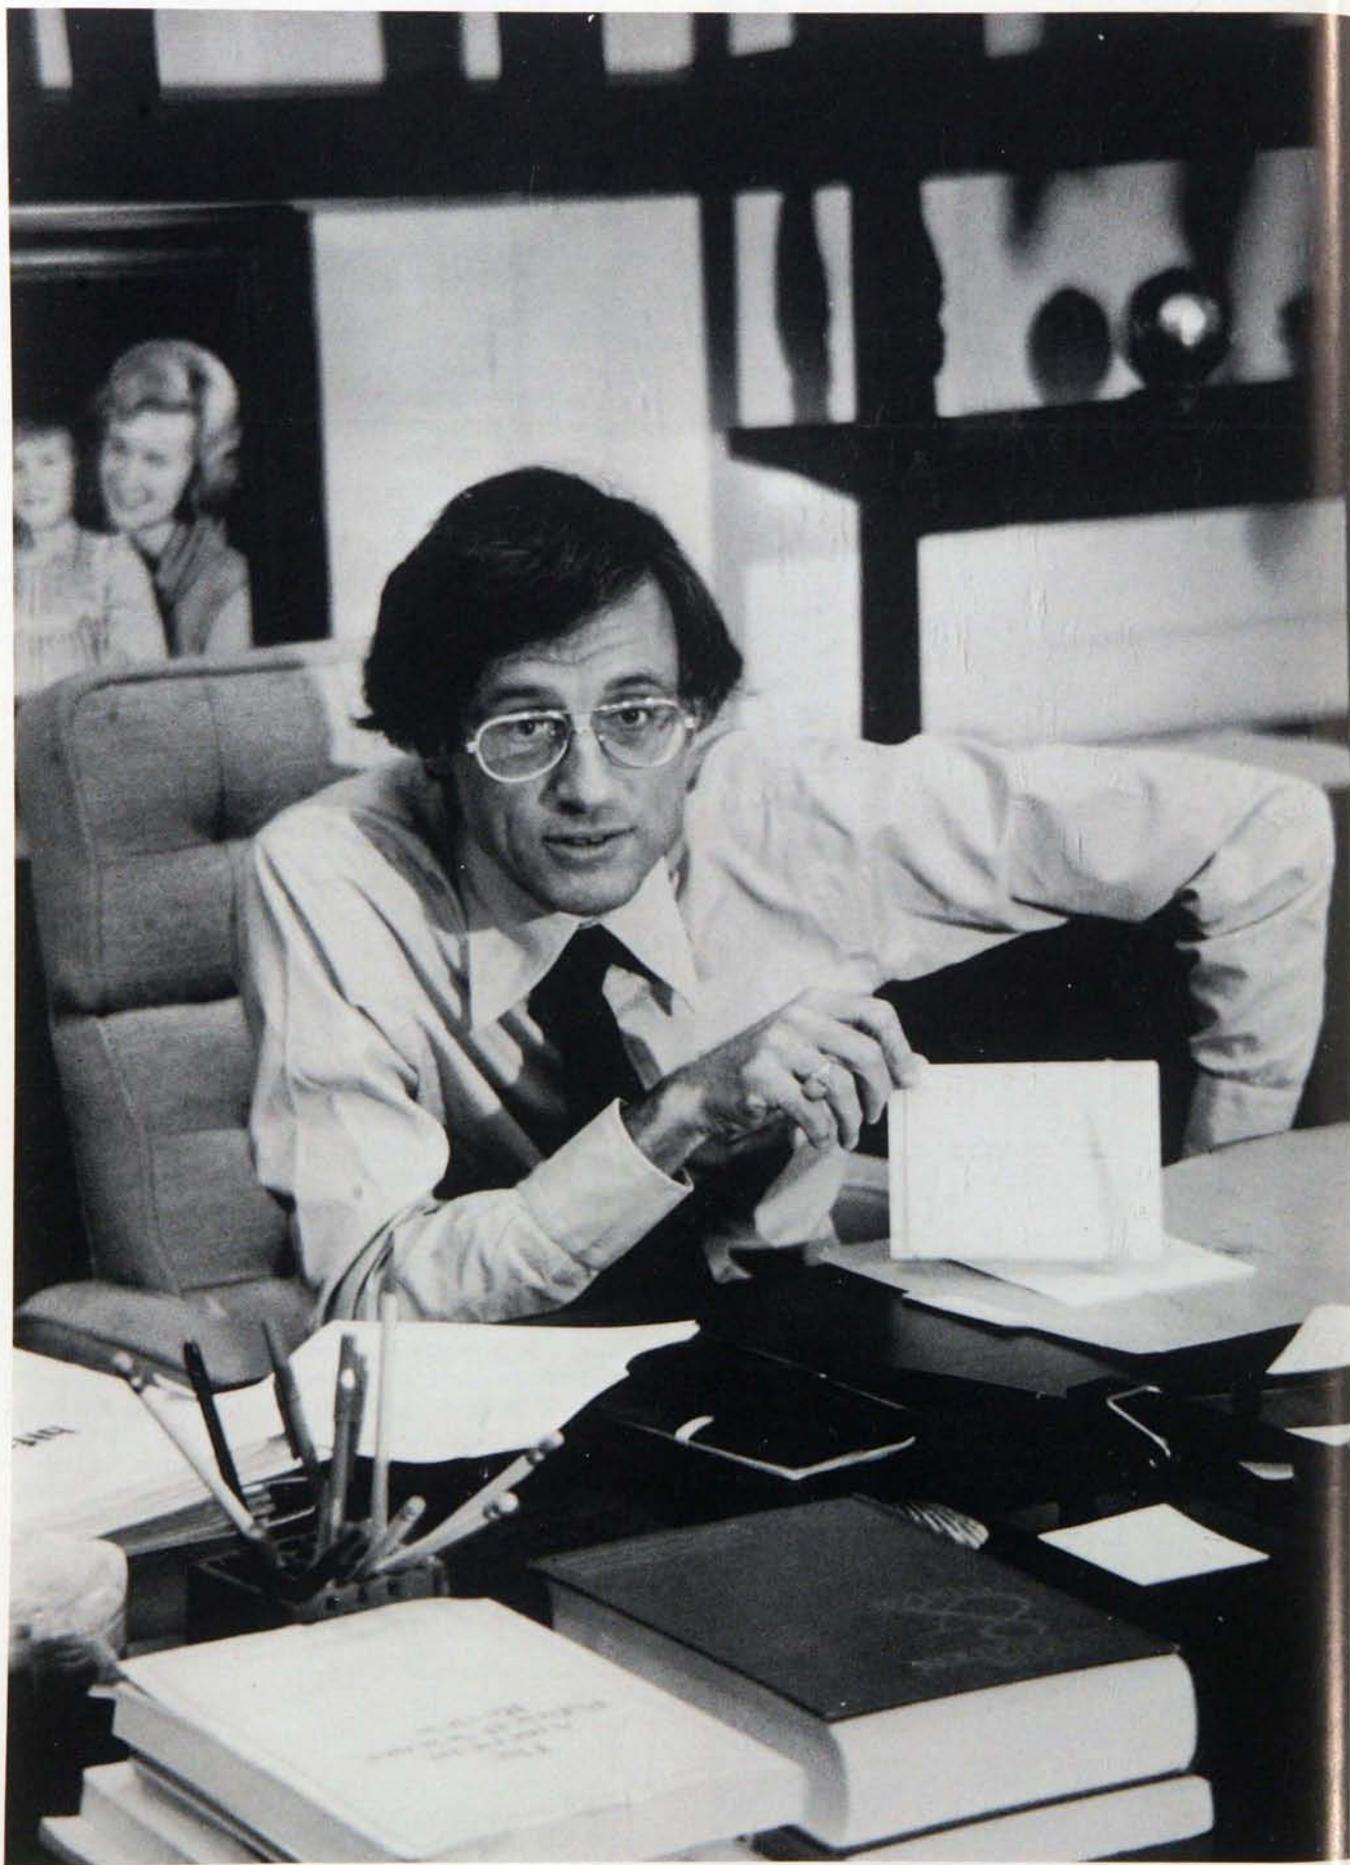

"You see, he doesn't have a whole lot of hobbies like other people do," she explains. "Peter has never played cards in his life, or any game, and considers it, I'm sure, a waste of time, and he doesn't and won't dance . . ."

"In the evenings he never watches television. That's not his thing. Every night, if he's not out, or out of town, he's in his den doing paperwork. He has to, to stay on top."

Aside from a growing appreciation for Cuban, Haitian and Dominican cigars of various sizes and shapes in recent years, Peter Magrath says he is a firm believer in "deferred gratification." Although he enjoys travel, shopping and an occasional movie and dinner out with his wife, he allows himself few indulgences, unless daily jogging can be counted in that category. He is also an early riser. The president gets out of bed most mornings between 5 and 5:30, he says, and jogs four to six miles a day. It is a habit he acquired three years ago.

"By running on a very systematic basis, I keep my weight down and it's a good way to gain a certain degree of solitude." He says since he started running and eliminated one meal a day, he's lost about 30 pounds and dropped more than four inches from his waistline. "Some people worry that I'm too thin, but I'm not. I've talked to the doctors and I'm about the same weight as I was in college."

"River Road runner" Peter Magrath logs four to six miles daily.

At 5 feet, 8 inches and 135 pounds, Magrath appears somewhat gaunt, though not unhealthy. Concern about his health among his colleagues, however, is perhaps to be expected since his bout with a rare nervous disorder — Guillian Barre syndrome — that partially paralyzed him for a few months during the 1975–1976 academic year.

"I've still got a slight nerve tremor," he says holding out his arms when asked if he has any aftereffects from the disease. "That's all, nothing else. I get very good ratings from my friend Dr. Hugh Thompson at the University Health Service — knock on wood," Magrath says rapping on the top of his skull with his knuckles.

Before adopting his current health regimen, he says he "basically led a fairly sedantary life. I used to exercise furiously sometimes, take a shower, but then invariably have a good double Jack Daniels and a lot of cashew nuts, followed by a big meal with a lot of desert. Then about three years ago I cut out that every-evening drink and decided I would eat less. So now I eat twice a day and don't snack, but I eat pretty much what I want when I do eat."

Most of these changes in lifestyle coincide with his divorce from his first wife, Sandra, in 1977 and marriage a year later to Diane Skomars, then director of the University's Student Activities Center. At the time, she was 34 and had a three-year-old daughter, Monette, by a previous marriage, while he was 44 with a 22-year-old daughter, Valerie.

"I identify very closely with student issues and I always will, I hope," Diane says, noting that she was director of the University's Student Activities Center (SAC) from 1974 until shortly after her marriage to Peter Magrath in 1978. In fact, on the same day he was named president, 30-year-old Diane Skomars was picketing the administration building demanding child care on campus. Besides child care and other women's issues, she says she also joined in anti-war demonstrations and civil rights marches in the 1960's and early 1970's.

Six-year-old Monette holds Max, a recent birthday present, while enjoying an after-school snack.

"My flame flickers more brightly sometimes than others," President Magrath says, "but I'm not burned out, not yet."

Wife and working 'Partner to the President', Diane Magrath reserves "a right to say what I think too."

"I'm grateful we didn't meet during the Vietnam War," she says, laughing. "Honest to god, we probably would have strangled each other because we're still arguing that."

When Diane quits her job as SAC director in 1978, she assumed an unofficial position working for her husband as "Partner to the President of the University of Minnesota." He pays her $25,000 a year out of his $70,000 yearly salary and, according to her typewritten job description, she performs a lengthy list of duties including: "professional assistance to the president"; entertaining and public relations; community leadership; and coordinating activities at Eastcliff, the president's official residence.

Perhaps her most visible public relations project on behalf of the University so far, has been "Matrix," a 13-part television series produced by University Media Resources that premiered last January on Twin Cities station KSTP-TV. With her master's degree in speech and communication, Diane says she also had a professional interest in developing the concept with the help of Media Resources director Sheldon Goldstein. She serves as chairwoman of the "Matrix" advisory committee and is busy now lining up funding for a new series.

As partner to the president she also feels it's appropriate that she sometimes discusses University problems with him. "I give advice," she says, "but he gets advice from lots of people and I'm one more bit of advice — that's all."

Room 624 in the Campus Club is not what you usually think of as an executive dining room. It is spare, almost nondescript. Like a vacant room in a modern museum caught between exhibits, its essence is functional neutrality.

Most days Peter Magrath doesn't eat lunch at all, but circumstances sometimes require him to be flexible. So at noon on this particular Tuesday in late September he finds himself in this small dining room eating lunch with John Cowles Jr. and most of the other directors and officers of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune Company.

Following the meal Magrath asks F. Gerald Kline, the director of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication, to make a few appropriate remarks.

Kline tells the newspaper executives that the journalism curriculum will be "revamped in the next five or six years" to put more emphasis on "management economics." Thanks to an endowment by John Cowles Sr. (a past head of the Star and Tribune Company) and his wife,

Elizabeth Bates Cowles, a professorship will soon be established in media management and economics to begin that curriculum change, Kline says. The Cowles endowment also provided funds for the establishment of the Minnesota Journalism Center at the University, a forum for the exchange

Magrath then introduces David Lilly, the dean of the College of Business Administration. He is the man, Magrath says, who is responsible for "relating (the college) for the first time to the business community in Minnesota."

"Our purpose is to improve the economy of Minnesota," Lilly forthrightly tells the assembled businessmen, "by providing a stream of graduates to take their places in business and industry." University professors also act as consultants to private enterprise and do research and development work, as well, he points out.

"The cost is high if we cut into the University too deeply," Lilly warns apparently referring to the recent $14.1 million budget cut. "Please give us some help at the legislature during the next session."

And then Magrath, noting that the legislature failed to appropriate funds for an additional business administration building during the last session, adds: "I overtly solicit your support for that $5 million plus project."

"The fundamental issues of concern to the University," President Magrath maintains "are those that have to do with setting priorities in dealing with inadequate financial resources — maintaining support for research and University services to the state, adequate financial aid for students and assuring access for minorities." Repeated retrenchments during the last decade have "cut all the fat" from University operations, he says, and the $14.1 million slash in the 1980-1981 budget "threatens to cut into the muscle."

Political issues that arise on campus "arouse emotions and attract immediate attention," while more basic University concerns are sometimes ignored by students and faculty, he says.

"You could have a crackling good seminar for two quarters on the social and political issues involving the American university and deal with any number of issues, including financial issues," Magrath says. "I think the issues that a university president faces today are far more complex than they were 20 or 30 years ago . . . I sort of yearn for those perhaps more tranquil days when a university president could go off and sit in on classes and listen to different programs and seminars and faculty. . . ."

The most intense work periods for the president are the initial weeks of each month when the Board of Regents hold their meetings. "Those are always tense weeks," Diane says, "they have to be by the nature of the job."

To relax after the regents meetings, though, Magrath frequently takes the family to their cabin in Shell Lake, Wis., for the weekend, she says.

"I think Peter's happiest moments are when we're at the cabin," Diane says. "He gets out on the deck of the porch with a glass of wine and a cigar — honest to god, a Churchill, the longest — and he cooks a steak out there on this grill that he can plug in.

"He's totally relaxed and then he puts on this miserable record of 'Oh, Shenandoah,' and 'On Top of Old Smokey' — all the biggies as loud as he can, with his fire going in there. Then I know he's fine. He's absolutely in heaven, right then, on that spot." **■

Happ100th, Kappas

This portrait of the Chi Chapter was taken in 1896 and includes these turn-of-the-century names: Jessie, Julia, Bessie, Ella, Belle, Alice, and Flora.

OF THE 16 SORORITIES at the University of Minnesota, Kappa Kappa Gamma is the oldest: 100 years.

The Chi Chapter was founded April 21, 1880, by eight women. Daughters of three University presidents, William Watts Folwell, Cyrus Northrop, and Marion L. Burton, were members.

So is golfer Patty Berg.

This year the Kappas have 91 members: 17 live in the chapter house at 329 10th Avenue southeast; 19 live in the annex next door; 12 live in the dorms; and 43 commute. Of 27 new pledges, three are juniors, six are sophomores, and 18 are freshmen. Since 1880, there have been approximately 1,650 active memberships in Chi.

Other claims?

Alice Adams coined the name of the University's yearbook, the "Gopher."

The Kappas gave the Pillsbury Gate, entrance to the campus on 14th Avenue, to the University.

The first woman to receive Phi Beta Kappa at the University was Effie Ames-Rochford.

The chapter house was built in 1916 and was designed by the head of the University's architecture department.

Some 1980 Kappas include, top row from left page 19, Cari Bailey, Margaret Scherer, Stephanie Precht, and Anne Holloran. Bottom row, Becky Barnes, Julie Erickson, and Martha Willson. Holloran and Willson are members of the Minnesota Alumni Association Student Board. At right, Alice A. Adams (Mrs. Walter A. Eggleston) suggested that the yearbook be called the "Gopher." Her name is listed on the board of editors, who appeared in the 1888 "Gopher." Below, this is the house that Chi built in 1916 and its raised border on the walls of the living room were molded from a border in an English cottage. The fireplace tiles, now covered, were made by a Pennsylvanian.

Hovde received a degree from the University of Minnesota in 1929. His sister, Ruth Hovde, '38, '49, is director of the Division of Medical Technology at the University's Medical School. In 1959 she became the first woman full professor in the U.S. to head a Medical Technology division.

FREDERICK L. HOVDE and his neighborhood friend Joe O'Brien arrived at Minneapolis to enroll in the University of Minnesota in September 1925. Not outwardly much different than 458 other freshmen bent on pursuing engineering, still Hovde felt some trepidation about the whole experience.

The University of Minnesota was, and is, an impressive environment for two young lads from a small town in North Dakota. Even then, the University of Minnesota enrolled more than 15,000 on two campuses in Minneapolis and St. Paul and was one of the nation's largest institutions.

"I thought, 'My god, the University will be terribly difficult,'" Hovde says. But if he had had a minor crisis of confidence — has there ever been a college freshman who did not? — it was shortlived. At the end of his first quarter, Hovde had straight A's and discovered that it wasn't as difficult as he had first imagined.

Though he lived in a rooming house with a dozen other students in the first two quarters, it was almost a foregone conclusion that he would join Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Several of his older friends at Devils Lake were Phi Deltas, and he had been "sold" on it during a visit to the Phi Delt house at the University of North Dakota.

These excerpts are from The Hovde Years, a biography of Frederick L. Hovde, copyright 1980 by Purdue Research Foundation. Robert W. Topping joined the Purdue staff in 1962 and is assistant to the vice president for development.

Eventually, Hovde pledged Phi Delta Theta — one of a class of 15 pledges — and after two quarters in the rooming house, moved into the Phi Delt house at 1027 University Avenue, where he lived during the remainder of his college career at Minnesota.

Even though he had made up his mind that he probably would never make any of the University varsity athletic teams, Hovde went out for freshman football — "I think I played on about the fifth team" he says — and later for freshman basketball and track.

Athletics played a great part in Hovde's college years but did not dominate them. Thus, he found a happy balance between sports and academics through wise management of his time. Hovde took freshman chemistry under Prof. G. B. Heisig and came to enjoy it so thoroughly that he switched his major from civil engineering to chemical engineering in which he ultimately got his Bachelor of Science degree.

His undergraduate years he describes simply as "pleasant ones." He said he considers the University of Minnesota and University of Wisconsin as "two of the most vital universities in terms of intellectual impact" during the 1920s. He recalls that some of the undercurrents that flowered in the late 1960s "were there in my day. Pacifism, for instance, manifested itself in student reaction against ROTC."

Hovde's undergraduate years were filled primarily with academics, athletics, and fraternity life. He had little time for anything else, so that debate, dramatics, and the hundreds of other attractions on the campus — such as dating — were hardly in the picture.

"Between the three, I was kept busy, and it was a problem of budgeting my time from morning until night. I had football practice at 4:30 every afternoon in the fall, so I had to do my lab work twice as fast as anybody else; laboratories went on until 5:30, and I had to finish and be ready to leave at 4:15. You never got caught up, so you worked at top speed and budgeted your time.

"You learned to concentrate in the classroom. I figured that you had to spend an hour in the classroom, so you might as well utilize that hour. Every hour properly utilized in the classroom simply meant you didn't have to spend that much time outside the class."

After he was graduated, Hovde found in retrospect that he really had few teachers he did not like. In addition to Professor Heisig, through whom he nurtured his love for chemistry, he mentions Miss Lillian Cohen, "who was a great lady — everyone who studied chemistry or chemical engineering knew her and her office was always open. Students enjoyed talking with her."

Hovde regarded an English professor, C. Ralph Bennett, as one of the most stimulating classroom teachers he had in college.

There also was Prof. Harlow Richardson, another member of the English department faculty whom Hovde admired and was admired by. He also mentions Gina Wangness, an instructor in German. Prof. William Hunter in organic chemistry was another of the beloved Minnesota teachers. "And then, of course, the head of chemical engineering, Charles Mann, was a fabulous character and individualist and stimulator of students," Hovde says.

Isaac W. Geiger in quantitative analysis "was one of the toughest taskmasters I had as an instructor," Hovde recalls. "It was a rough course, both in the lab and in the classwork, as well as in the problem-solving required. None of us particularly loved Professor Geiger, but after you got through, and looking back on the instructors that were good, Geiger always rated at the top because you felt that while he wasn't a personality to be loved, if you survived the experience of his class, you had something."

His German professor, James Davies, "delighted in fingering me out in class," Hovde says. "I had other priorities with respect to my time, and I didn't study German very much. I think the lowest grades I got in the university were in German — even though it was a required course for all chemistry and chemical engineering students."

Then there was Clarence W. "Doc" Spears, M.D., the Minnesota football coach who saw something in a 150-pound, slender sophomore scrub from Devils Lake and gave him a chance to become an all-American, all-conference back. Under Spears, football was rough and rugged, but for as long as Hovde could remember, football — most athletics — were important in his life. Though at first he felt dubious about making the team, he stuck with it and earned his numerals by playing well in a freshman intrasquad game. The following fall — 1926 — he made the varsity squad. As it turned out, Minnesota had a good season though not an excellent one, winning five and losing three with a 2-2 won-lost record in the Big Ten.

Summers, Hovde worked on the farms surrounding Devils Lake to earn money for school. Yet, he worried that because of the hard, hot work he would lose too much weight. Minnesota teams had a reputation for behemoth (for that day) players — linemen in the 200-plus range, backs of 160 to 170. At 150 pounds, what Hovde lacked in physique he made up in speed, brains, and deception. And Coach Spears took ample note of his ability.

The end of the 1928 football season was also the end of Hovde's brilliant football career, but the accolades continued. Not only was Hovde the leading scorer in the Big Ten in 1928 with 54 points, he was also named first string all-conference, and conference coaches voted him the outstanding player of the 1928 season. He also was named second-team quarterback on the Knute Rockne all-American squad.

Besides his nine touchdowns, Hovde carried the ball 91 times for 533 yards, averaging 5.85 yards a try. He returned 49 punts for an average of 6.55 yards each, and he bobbled no punts in 1928 (contrasting with his tragic fumble of 1927 against Notre Dame).

"It doesn't really matter a damn to anybody whether I played football or not. It only means something to me. Thousands of people watched me play and all that sort of thing. But the real answer for me is a personal one and relates to my own ego — the personal, ego — involvement that all of us have with ourselves. That fact that I weighed 150 pounds and could make the Minnesota team against competition was an enormous inner satisfaction. I know that it's only meaningful to me. It doesn't make a damn bit of difference in the life of anybody else.

"And it was an intellectual challenge to me — football. It was the solving of problems — the tactical problem on the field in how to maximize your forces at your command, how to stop the other guy," he says.

As involved as he was in football and basketball and while maintaining a B-plus average in chemical engineering, still Hovde found time for other campus activities and in the spring of 1928 was elected — by more than a 200-vote margin — president of the Junior Ball Association.

Hovde's election to the position was probably engineered by the senior men's honorary society, Gray Friar's to which Hovde himself was elected as a senior. It was one of two self-perpetuating senior honoraries composed of most of the campus leaders. The other was Iron Wedge.

Hovde met Priscilla Louise Boyd at a "Bowery" party. She was a junior at Minnesota, was majoring in history and was a Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority sister of Peg Pinger. Priscilla was born at Saint James, Minn., on June 29, 1908; her father James Jonathan Boyd, was a traveling salesman in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Wisconsin in the hardware business. Priscilla's mother was a Mueller, the family that founded the Minneapolis Packing Co. The Boyds moved to Los Angeles in 1920 when Priscilla was 12. Her father lost his money in an ill-fated business venture and returned to Minneapolis in 1927, although without his daughter, who remained behind as a student at the University of California at Los Angeles while living with her grandmother.

She agreed to the blind date with Fred Hovde for the "Bowery" party. Later, Hovde wrote on the back of the invitation, "I had the best time of my life at this party. A blind date with Pris Boyd. Broke training on this night after our fun with Wisconsin on November 24, 1928."

The two hit it off well. "We liked each other right from the start," Hovde recalls. "She was a junior and I was a senior, and we had a great time that year."

In his senior year, Hovde won not only football honors, but those accorded for academics and leadership as well — induction into Tau Beta Pi, the all-engineering scholastic honorary, Phi Lambda Upsilon, the chemical honorary; Plumb Bob, the senior honorary society of the technical colleges at Minnesota; and of course Gray Friars.

Hovde played varsity basketball although his career in that sport no way compared to the illustrious record he made on the gridiron. He made the basketball squad as a sophomore, but did not earn his letter until he was a junior, then played guard two seasons, the first under Coach Harold Taylor, the second in 1928–29 under Dave MacMillan, the famed free-throw shooter who had played with the professional Original Celtics in New York.

"I wasn't a very good shot," Hovde says. "Our gym back at Devils Lake had a very low ceiling, so in high school we could never learn to arch our two-hand push shots properly. Our team at Devils Lake was a good passing team, so our strategy was to work the ball in close for the short shots."

In the fall of 1928, Hovde began to think more seriously about what he wanted to do after he graduated. Dominating his thinking was the possibility of a job in industry as a chemical engineer.

Lounging in the living room of the Phi Delt house one day early in October, 1928, Hovde was reading the Minnesota Daily, the campus newspaper. He saw an announcement of the 1929 Rhodes Scholarships to Oxford.

Later on, Fred returned to Minneapolis aboard a Sunday night train and arrived early Monday morning. He caught the streetcar out to the campus, got off at University Avenue and Eleventh Street, and walked the half block to the Phi Delt house. He met a Phi Delta brother, Francis Moltier, coming out of the house heading toward the campus.

"Congratulations," Moltier shouted, smiling.

"What for?" Hovde asked.

"The announcement about your winning the Rhodes Scholarship. It's in the morning paper."

In the spring quarter of his senior year at Minnesota, less than five weeks from graduation, Hovde was dismayed to find that he was, somehow, three credits shy. Panic rose in his throat as he went directly to Dean Ora Miner Leland of the School of Engineering and Architecture and the School of Chemistry to find out what he must do.

He got no help and little sympathy. In the office of Prof. William Hunter, he explained his plight and was perplexed when Hunter threw back his head and laughed loudly. A strange reaction, thought Hovde. Why?

"The same thing happened to me at Harvard," Hunter explained. He gave Hovde a textbook, the famed British scientist Nevil Sidgewick's Organic Chemistry of Nitrogen. "Read this," Hunter instructed him, "and see me every Friday afternoon."

"For the next five Fridays in a row I went in to see Professor Hunter. We seemed to talk about everything under the sun but the organic chemistry of nitrogen. I had read about a fifth of the book, but at the end of the quarter, he gave me my three needed credits in organic chemistry of nitrogen. Later, at Oxford, I became acquainted with Sidgewick, but I did not study under him," Hovde says.

After he graduated in the spring of 1929 with a bachelor's degree in chemical engineering, he returned to Devils Lake for the summer to work in the wheat harvest and to prepare for his three-year adventure in England as an Oxonian. He was just 21. AA

Basketball opener is with North Dakota State

Dutcher Begins Sixth Year

WITH FOUR OF FIVE starters returning for the 1980-1981 basketball season, Minnesota basketball fortunes are expected to continue to climb under sixth-year coach Jim Dutcher.

The Golden Gophers finished 21-11 last season and wound up as a finalist in the National Invitation Tournament. Only one player, Kevin McHale, has graduated from that squad.

Leading the returnees is 6-4 junior guard Darryl Mitchell, a talented and intelligent backcourt standout who was named to the All-NIT tourney team last year and will serve as captain of the Gophers this season.

Mitchell will be joined by returning starters (and also all juniors) 6-10 Gary Holmes who has played center and forward, 6-5 Trent Tucker who has been used at guard and forward, and 6-2 guard Mark Hall.

"It's ours," cries Gary Holmes as he steals the ball from a University of Iowa player last season. Behind Holmes is Trent Tucker.

Also on hand, and expected to take McHale's spot in the starting lineup for Minnesota, is 7-2 sophomore Randy Breuer. Another All-NIT choice last March, Breuer has an excellent touch around the basket and could make Dutcher's quintet an extremely explosive offensive team this year.

Other lettermen returning for Minnesota will be Ben Coleman, a 6-9 sophomore forward; Zebedee Howell, a 6-7 sophomore forward; Bruce Kaupa, a 6-1 sophomore guard; and Andy Thompson, a 6-6 junior forward.

Coach Dutcher signed only three players to national letters of intent for the 1980-1981 season.

but he figures each could play an important role in Minnesota's surge this year.

Those newcomers include Jim Petersen, a 6-10 forward who was named "Mr. Basketball" in Minnesota this past year; Brian Hansen, a 6-3 guard; and John Wiley, a 6-7 junior forward.

One "if" that still is being mentioned around the Gopher camp is Brian Pederson, a 6-10 junior letterman who did not compete last season when hampered with a back injury.

Pedersen was a promising cager in Gold Country and was expected to play a prominent role during the 1979-80 season before that back problem put him on the shelf. If recovered, he could figure heavily in Dutcher's plans this year.

The Gophers have had only one losing season under Dutcher . . . that an 11-16 season two years ago when Minnesota started four freshmen and a junior.

Hockey Outlook

NEAL BROTEN, rookie star of the 1978-1979 Minnesota national champion hockey team and last year a key member of the Gold Medal winning U. S. Olympic Hockey Team, will again don the maroon and gold of the Golden Gophers this winter.

The only member of the Olympic squad to return to college hockey, Broten, however, had to undergo some anxious moments before learning his course was set as planned for the coming season.

Following the Olympic games at Lake Placid, N.Y., the hockey squad gathered in New York City, and part of their time was spent before the cameras filming an advertisement for a national business firm.

Unlike his teammates, however, Broten did not receive any financial compensation for his appearance. But his appearing in said commercial was challenged and it wasn't until recently that the NCAA enforcement committee ruled in his favor . . . ruled that Broten had not violated any NCAA rule.

Thus, the outstanding sophomore-to-be will join the 1980-81 Gopher varsity under new head coach Brad Buetow. Possibly most important of all for Neal is the opportunity to rejoin his high school buddies this year.

For three years at Roseau high school in Minnesota, Broten centered a line between wings Aaron Broten, his younger brother, and Butsy Erickson. It was one of the most prolific scoring lines in Minnesota prep hockey history. They may not skate as a unit this year as Aaron, last year's WCHA Rookie of the Year, has become an excellent center himself.

The Gophers were 26-15-0 and finished second in the WCHA last season. A strong nucleus of returnees from that squad is now that much deeper in talented vets with the return of Neal Broten.

Hockey Special

THE UNIVERSITY of Minnesota hockey team will play the U.S. International University at the Miramesa House of Ice, San Diego, December 6 and 7 at 5:30 p.m.

Chapter leaders attend a special day

Honor Alumni Chapters Cited

YOU NAME IT and our chapters — 17 full-service ones out of state and 12 in-state — are doing or thinking about doing it: a night at the Boston Pops, football luncheons, baseball game, day at the races, night at the Kennedy Center, family picnic, Congressional cocktail party, silent auctions for scholarship funds, young alumni party, ski weekend.

And some, like the five chapters selected as the outstanding chapters for 1980, are doing a whole lot more, according to Nancy Devine, director of the chapter program. They are: Rochester, Suncoast (Tampa-St. Petersburg area), Dayton, Sun City, and New York Area. The honor chapters were recognized for offering good programs while serving the University through special projects.

Nancy recently visited 13 chapters out of state (she said she spent 32½ hours in the air, 40 hours waiting at airports, and all on one Eastern Airlines ticket) as well as 11 chapters in-state. The trips provided her with an opportunity to talk with officers and contacts about their interests and concerns related to the University. Devine will continue to travel throughout the state this winter to increase alumni participation in the chapter program.

At Leadership Day recently more than 60 chapter leaders discussed the purpose of their chapters, how their chapters can help the University, how the Minnesota Alumni Association can help them, and goals for the year. Devine noted that chapters provide people the opportunity to meet other alumni living in their community, learn about what is happening on campus and assist the University with projects sponsored by the chapters. Chapters organize programs for recruiting students, supporting intercollegiate athletic events, and contributing to the student leadership scholarship fund.

"We are recommending the establishment of two chapters out of state in Milwaukee and Seattle," she said, "along with two more in Minnesota: Austin (Mower County), Fergus Falls (Otter Tail County).

"We also will be continuing to develop our network of contacts throughout the state and country where we do not have full service chapters."

New York Alumni Will Salute Theater

SEVERAL HUNDRED alumni in the New York City area are expected to attend a dinner February 11 where Dr. Frank M Whiting will be the featured speaker.

"We expect many distinguished graduates of the University of Minnesota theater will be present and will contribute to the evening's program," said Mrs. Marilyn (McCrudden) Thorson, '55, who is chairwoman for the event.

The University Theater is celebrating its 50th anniversary season.

Whiting, who was captain of the Minnesota Centennial Showboat, retired from the University Theater-faculty in 1971 after 34 years' experience.

He also was instrumental in getting Tyrone Guthrie to establish the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis.

The Showboat's premier production was June 26, 1958, and featured Augustin Daly's "Under the Gaslight." The first year more than 20,000 persons from 45 states and 17 countries saw Showboat productions.

"All University alumni in the New York City area are welcome to attend this event," said Mrs. Thorson, a cum laude graduate who appeared in such productions as "The Madwoman of Chaillot," "Man and Superman," and was Wendy in "Peter Pan."

The dinner will be at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in New York City. Reservations may be made by calling Tiffany at (212) 554-3977 or by writing to him at 1285 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Dance

NORTHROP DANCE SEASON

SAN FRANCISCO BALLET

November 4, 5

Some people, according to song lyrics, "leave their heart in San Francisco," but it was the San Francisco Ballet dancers themselves who captured the hearts of Minnesotans in two radiant performances at Northrop last spring. The fresh, inspired company, complete with its own orchestra, brings two new programs this fall.

LES BALLETS TROCKEDERO DE MONTE CARLO

November 15

Back by popular demand — with a new program. If you missed this madcap spoof of classical ballet last year, here's a second chance to see just what it is that makes people say, "I don't think I'll ever be able to see ballet again without giggling." The men know their ballet all right, consequently when they throw a satirical punch, they score a hit.

AMERICAN BALLET THEATRE

January 19-24

Mikhail Baryshnikov, who becomes artistic director of this country's "Ballet of Stars" in the fall, says the stars will appear during American Ballet Theatre's coming engagement, and the programs for the seven performances will feature a number of ballets not previously seen here. Both full-length classics and repertoire works will be part of this fourth annual residency.

ALVIN AILEY AMERICAN DANCE THEATRE

March 13, 14

The Ailey company emphasizes eloquent performing with roles that demand intense pitches of emotion and physicality. Alvin Ailey's programs always offer a wide range of artistry — his own works, which blend primitive, modern and jazz dance in explorations of basic human conditions, plus the works of a multitude of other choreographers.

MERCE CUNNINGHAM DANCE COMPANY

April 25

"Never to have seen a Cunningham program is to have missed one of the revolutionary turns in the road of contemporary dance," writes one of the country's foremost dance critics. "In his fragmented dissociated way, Mr. Cunningham has taught both dancers and audiences to regard dance differently. A regular dancegoer who passes up the Cunningham experience is not a very daring one."

DANCE THEATRE OF HARLEM

May 2, 3

This newcomer to the Northrop season is acclaimed for its contemporary and classical repertoire, and for its marvelous dancers who convey the true feeling the dance is their language. The company's variety and vitality are a credit to Arthur Mitchell, founder and artistic director (with Karel Shook). Mitchell's choreography of Swan Lake Act II is one of the company's showpieces.

These events take place at Northrop Auditorium. For further information call (612) 373-2345.

HORIZONS

Horizons is a weekly documentary series of half-hour programs that explores issues and concerns of minorities, women, and other special interest groups. This segment is titled A Question of Place: Sound Portraits of Twentieth Century Humanists.

BERTRAND RUSSELL

November 7

Russell went everywhere, knew everyone, and had an opinion — generally vehement — on everything. But he was no mere dilettante. He was one of the greatest philosophers of the century and his work in mathematical logic remains definitive. As passionate in his social and political views as he was stringent in his intellectual analyses, Russell was a public figure throughout his life. He espoused unpopular causes ranging from votes for women in the early years of the century to nuclear disarmament in the years before his death in 1970. This profile dramatizes excerpts from writings by and about Russell to portray this brilliant and willful, dry and passionate, quintessentially paradoxical man. John Houseman stars in the title role. The narrator is Tammy Grimes.

NOAM CHOMSKY

November 14

Inherent in the thicket of transformational linguistics and generative grammar (of which Chomsky is the father) is an apologia for human nature, human uniqueness. Drawing on a vast variety of language examples, the program demonstrates what a richly complex, yet highly ordered system language really is.

SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR

November 21

The words of this philosopher and writer, spiritual founder of the women's movement, are performed with passion and intelligence by Viveca Lindfors. Tammy Grimes narrates the program which also features analyses of De Beauvoir's literary and political importance by Elaine Marks and Ti Grace Atkinson.

WILLIAM FAULKNER

November 28

He wrote of the American south with truth and universality. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1949. He is portrayed in this program by Tennessee Williams; the narrator is Colleen Dewhurst.

10 Years Before Career Clicks

EVERYTHING WAS as it is supposed to be when the theaters let out that sultry, mid-summer Sunday in midtown Manhattan. The chauffeured, black limousines were lined up and waiting alongside the NO PARKING signs on West 45th Street, engines and air conditioners running. And near Broadway a mounted policeman herded pedestrians onto the sidewalks as wave after wave of theatergoers flooded the sticky streets.

Meanwhile, behind a star cradled in a crescent moon on her dressing room door in the Brooks Atkinson Theater, Debra Mooney, '74, sipped a cool drink from a clear glass in her right hand and leisurely smoked a cigarette held casually in her left. Without makeup now, in her dressing gown, she seemed relaxed after three matinees and five evening performances, savoring her first week in a starring role on Broadway. The wall above her mirror was festooned with congratulatory letters and telegrams and there were flowers at each end of the cluttered dressing table.

"It takes about 10 years before it clicks," Debra Mooney says, referring to her now thriving career as an actress. She had just taken over the role of Sally Talley in Lanford Wilson's Pulitzer Prize-winning play "Talley's Folly," after having originated the role in a Chicago production. The play opened on Broadway February 20th, with Trish Hawkins and Judd Hirsch, but the success of the play extended the run beyond their previous commitments, so Debra Mooney and Jordan Charney stepped in. They were warmly received by a capacity audience on their opening night. It's the sort of play, New York magazine says, "that makes the weather inside you, suddenly and lingeringly spring."

Miss Mooney has also established herself as an actress in the movies and on television since leaving the University six years ago. Currently she is featured as Marilyn Schneider in the screen version of Neil Simon's "Chapter Two," after four months in the Broadway production of that play. On television she appeared as Dr. Petrie with Judd Hirsch in "Del-vecchio." And soap opera fans know her as "sweet and looney Grace" on ABC-TV's "All My Children," she adds.

Debra Mooney originally came to the University of Minnesota in 1971 with the intention of pursuing an academic career after earning her master of fine arts degree in theater, she says. Her performance as Blanche in the University production of Tennessee Williams' "A Streetcar Named Desire," however, prompted the playwright himself to acclaim her "the best young actress in America." Williams' adulation brought her nationwide attention in 1972. Writing in the New York Times, Williams said: "I saw Blanche played with great wit as well as pathos last spring at the University of Minnesota. She made me howl with laughter at my own work."

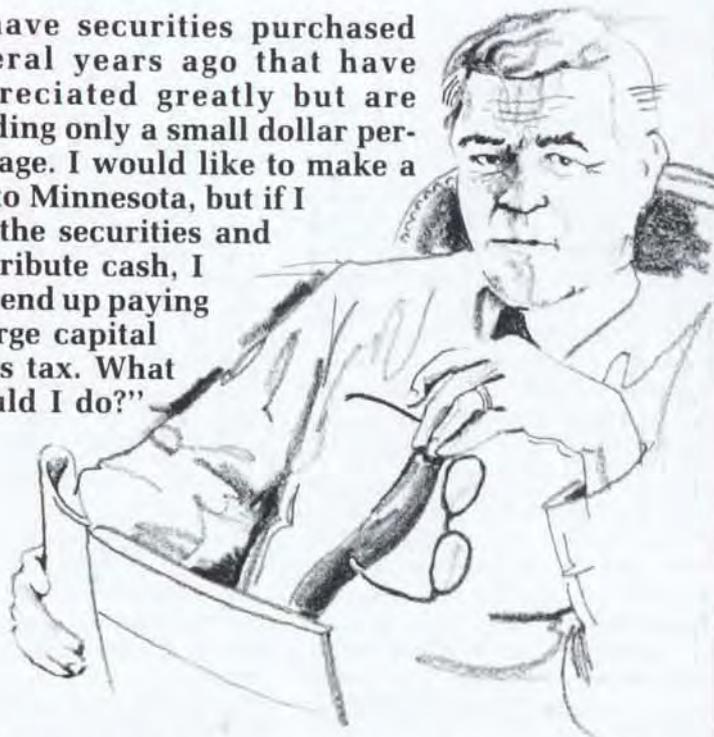

Williams' acclamation combined with the breakup of her marriage during that period finally convinced her to pursue a career as an actress, she says. She has since played Blanche at the Meadow Brook Theater in Rochester, Mich., and the Manitoba Theater Center in Winnipeg, as well as other Williams' heroines in New York City at the Roundabout and the Circle Repertory Co. In Chicago she was nominated for a Joseph Jefferson Award for her performance as Wendy in David Storey's play "The Farm" at the Academy Festival. Before leaving the Twin Cities area, Miss Mooney worked as an announcer for KUOM radio and played a wide range of roles at the Chanhassen Dinner Theater, including Kate Keller in "The Miracle Worker," Golde in "Fiddler on the Roof" and Dolly in "The Matchmaker."

To unwind that evening Debra Mooney said she planned to play Scrabble with a group of writers and actors she met while at the University who are now struggling to make their own careers "click" in New York City, L.L.E.

Debra Mooney is featured in the University's 1972 production of "A Streetcar Named Desire."

SEARCHING FOR YOUR ANCESTORS The How and Why of Genealogy (revised edition)

by Gilbert H. Doane and James B. Bell
People of all backgrounds are becoming interested in their family histories. SEARCHING FOR YOUR ANCESTORS is written for the person who wants to learn more about his or her family tree but doesn't know where to start. This lively guide provides advice about where to begin — with living relatives — and discusses the many paths the search might take. The authors offer step-by-step instructions for tracing elusive ancestors through the use of family papers, wills, town and church records, gravestone inscriptions, and government sources. Several sample charts suggest how the family tree should be organized. The authors' advice will help the amateur genealogist follow up promising leads and guard against false information. Throughout, their common-sense approach suggests ways to obtain the greatest amount of accurate information with the least amount of wasted effort.

This new edition, the fifth of a popular guide, has been completely updated and revised. The authors have broadened the scope of previous editions by adding specific information for over 35 ethnic groups. Lists of out-of-the-way sources and suggestions for further reading make this a useful work for experienced genealogists as well as a good introduction for beginners. The authors' advice is based on years of experience in tracing family histories and is illustrated with specific examples and anecdotes.

Gilbert H. Doane, who wrote the first edition of SEARCHING FOR YOUR ANCESTORS in 1937, is editor emeritus of the NEW ENGLAND HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL REGISTER and professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin. James B. Bell is director of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

About 208 pages, 5½ × 8½.

FAMILY HISTORY RECORD BOOK

by James B. Bell

James Bell provides a substantial introduction and practical advice about how to obtain and record information efficiently.

About 160 pages, 8½ × 11.

List price: $7.95

Alumni members' price: $6.35

OPERA IN PERSPECTIVE

by John D. Drummond

Not a conventional history in any sense, OPERA IN PERSPECTIVE is rather a thought-provoking, original, and lively view of Western European music-drama as it has developed over many centuries. It sees opera as an art form in its own right, an integration of music and drama rather than a function of music or the stage.

John D. Drummond's concern is to place opera within the wider context of music-drama and to trace its changing forms within Western European cultural value-systems. Citing the elements of religion, play, and art as basic to all music-drama, he finds the origins of opera in primitive uses of mime and ritual. Drummond follows the operatic tradition from Greek tragedy through the music-drama of Rome, the Middle Ages, and the Renaissance, and on to the first "operas" of the seventeenth century. He selects and analyzes particular scenes and acts in a representative choice of operas from the Baroque, Classical, Romantic, Wagnerian, and contemporary periods, and at the same time surveys the work of most of the major operatic composers. His detailed analyses include Monteverdi's ORFEO, Handel's RODELINDA, Mozart's LE NOZZE DI FIGARO, Wagner's TRISTAN UND ISOLDE, and Britten's PETER GRIMES. OPERA IN PERSPECTIVE will be especially rewarding to music students, teachers, and scholars, ethnomusicologists, and all readers who have a special interest in opera.

John Drummond was a lecturer in music at the University of Birmingham in England and is now Blair Professor of Music at the University of Otago, New Zealand.

369 pages, 6 × 9; 23 figures, 31 music examples

List price: $25.00

Alumni Members' price: $20.00

A GUIDE TO THE ARCHITECTURE OF MINNESOTA

by David Gebhard and Tom Martinson

This comprehensive guide contains nearly 500 photographs of public buildings, churches, houses, and commercial structures, as well as descriptions of these and many more architectural sights throughout Minnesota.

Building entries include original name, current name or use, date, name of architect, street address, and an annotation. Maps of the geographic regions and of all the larger towns are incorporated in the text, and the book closes with a photohistory, an illustrated glossary of architectural styles, and a list of suggested readings.

Gebhard and Martinson are not dispassionate observers of the state's architecture. Their descriptions are lively, critical, often irreverent, and convey the authors' deep concern for the crafted building and its surroundings. Reviewing the book in MINNESOTA HISTORY, Roger Kennedy notes: "This book is the best thing in its field about Minnesota, and one of the three best architectural guides in the nation. It is solidly researched, extraordinary in the vitality and commitment manifested in its descriptive prose, and a welcome partner to chattier, earlier volumes."

David Gebhard, a native of Minnesota, is director of the art galleries and professor of architectural history at the University of California, Santa Barbara. Tom Martinson is principal planner in the office of the Minneapolis city coordinator.

469 pages, 474 illustrations, 49 maps.

BIRD ISLAND IN ANTARCTIC WATERS

by David F. Parmelee

Few maps show the location of Bird Island — a lonely outcrop in the South Georgia group where Antarctic waters push against the Atlantic east of Cape Horn. Its forbidding flanks invite few human visitors. But for those who reach its shores there are rich rewards. Ornithologist David Parmelee was one of the fortunate. Nowhere in the bird world had he seen anything to match the incredible numbers and unusual gathering of birds on this teeming speck of land.

Parmelee, a skilled artist as well as a scientist-explorer, spent six weeks on the island as the guest of a British scientific survey team. His story combines careful field observation and ornithological research with the excitement of exploration. BIRD ISLAND IN ANTARCTIC WATERS is illustrated with the author's drawings, paintings, and photographs which capture the wild-life and scenery of a fascinating part of the world.

David Parmelee is a professor at the University of Minnesota, where he teaches ornithology and is head of the field biology program. He specializes in polar birds and has conducted research in recent years at Palmer Station in Antarctica. Parmelee has received a number of grants from the National Science Foundation and in 1977 was honored with election as a fellow of the Explorers Club of New York.

TREES AND SHRUBS FOR NORTHERN GARDENS

by Leon C. Snyder

Defying the long, rough winters of the northern United States and nearby parts of Canada, hundreds of kinds of trees, shrubs, and woody vines thrive in and beautify the northern landscape. Now, in this book, a noted horticulturist provides information for gardeners, nurserymen, and students of horticulture on those plants hardy enough to flourish in a northern climate. The largest part of the book is an alphabetical guide to some 400 species of trees, shrubs, and woody vines, and their cultivars and botanical varieties. Each entry is listed by its scientific name, with common name in parentheses, and includes a technical description of the species and information on plant structure, culture and hardiness. Ninety-six pages of color photos give the reader a valuable aid to plant choice and identification. For students and serious gardeners Snyder provides identification keys; a glossary of botanical terms and a list of references round out the book.

Leon C. Snyder taught horticulture at the University of Minnesota for many years and was founding director of the University's Landscape Arboretum. He is the author of GARDENING IN THE UPPER MIDWEST (Minnesota) and writes a popular gardening column for the MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE.

About 464 pages, 6 × 9; 384 color photographs.

A Canoe World's Record

THEY STOOD one warm afternoon facing a hot sun and a handful of cool news media who asked about their world record-setting downstream canoeing victory.

At a news conference on the steps to the Boy Scouts' Indianhead Council in St. Paul, Steve Eckelkamp, 24, and Kirk Millhone, 22, calmly talked about their trip down the Mississippi River, through 29 locks and dams, into rain and rough currents, over shallow waters, while wind blasted them during most of the journey.

And because of bad weather, they said, they didn't make the trip in 32 days as they had planned.

They made it in 35, still a record.

A representative for the mayor of St. Paul gave them a check for $192.

The vice president of the United States sent a telegram.

The crowd of wellwishers gave them applause and smiles of support.

And the Sunkist people, who had earlier given them an 18½ foot fiberglass canoe, gave them gold wristwatches "as a token to remember the trip by."

They both have light reddish beards, good tans, and that faraway look as if they were gazing downstream.

The only noticeable difference is that Steve is short, Kirk is tall.

Well, there is one other difference. Steve's right hand is wrapped in a bandage.

"On the last night of the trip," he said after most of the TV cameramen had left, "I stepped on a slippery rock and gashed my hand. Some doctor in Port

Sulphur, Louisiana took four stitches and charged me $105."

Two years ago, on Oct. 4, 1978, a Royal Air Force team of three two-man canoes started at Lake Itasca, Minn.; 42 days and five hours later, they arrived at the Gulf of Mexico.

That record appears on page 456 of the 1980 paperback edition of "Guinness Book of World Records."

Steve and Kirk and their two-man support crew (Terry Haltner and Todd Sandberg) knew they could beat that record.

So, on August 26 at 6:20 a.m. they began their 2,552-mile attempt at Lake Itasca.

Thirty-five days, 11 hours and 22 minutes later they arrived at 5:42 p.m. September 30 south of New Orleans, beating the old record by nearly a week.

The support team drove a car pulling a trailer along the river where they would set up camp each night and haul equipment.

"We were the first group to recognize the desires of these young men," said Mark Matthews, president of the 21-member Alumni Association Student Board.

Student alumni also gave them some clerical assistance and wrote a letter to the vice president to make certain that the locks and dams would be open.

The experience cost the adventurers between $5,000 and $6,000, and, according to Eckelkamp, who is a senior in speech and communications at the University, "my bank account is sitting on zero."

"Any problems?"

Steve answers, "In the rice fields up north the channels would disappear and there would be weeds above our heads. We couldn't tell which way the river was going. I just guessed and I guessed right."

Before starting to set the record, they registered with London officials for the Guinness book.

"Now we have to send verification and wait for them to make the record official," Kirk said.

"And what," somebody asked at the press conference, "was the most enjoyable part of the whole trip?"

Without hesitation Kirk shot back: "The last two feet of the river."

LETTERS

He remembers Forrest Moore, student adviser

A Letter from China

A COUPLE OF WEEKS ago my dinner partner at a banquet in Dalian (China) was Nai Shui Chin who attended the University of Minnesota from 1950 to 1952.

He already had an economics degree from Michigan and got a certificate at Minnesota in industrial engineering.

He then went to New York and worked for I. Miller (shoe company) for four years, returning to Chicago in 1956. The rest of his family went to the U.S. by way of Taiwan and are now in New York.

He worked at the Harbin Institute of Technology and now works for the Heilungjiang Provincial Library.

For twenty-three years he spoke no English. In 1979 the government assigned him to interpret for a group from the Harvard Business School. Now he is here and is considered the best of the interpreters for this National Center for Science and Technology Management.

Born in Shengyang (then Mukden), he went to school in Tientsien and from there to the University of Michigan. He lives in Harbin with his wife and five children and hopes to return to the U.S. soon.

Nai Shui Chin would like letters.

Chin often thinks of his fellow students at Minnesota and particularly of Forrest Moore, who was then the foreign student adviser. He was known as David to his friends in the U.S.

His address:

And Then . . .

THE SEPTEMBER ISSUE of Minnesota was informative, bright and readable.

As a former Minnesota Daily editor, I'm not among those sick of hearing about Kate Stanley ("Staving off a Daily Disaster," September 1980).

I have a copy of a wire addressed to the regents protesting the action taken on the Daily fee to prove that.

I did feel that the Norton excerpts ended in mid-air. I turned the page to find a conclusion.

Leon Carr, '51
St. Paul

Problem is Deep

I NOT ONLY TAKE exception to the intent behind the publication of the two articles covering that unbelievably horrible Daily issue, I take extreme exception to the fact that you journalism fanatics really believe the publication of this filth is what "the freedom of the press" means. You know and I know that the formulation of the Bill of Rights did not mean that total filth could be published indiscriminately.

The problem is deep, deep. The problem is that the publication is filthy, and that Daily issue was just a small example, is undermining the moral fabric of our young people. I am sick and tired of you "intellectuals" who blindly defend this erroneous interpretation of the "freedom of the press."

Are you blind? Can't you see what's happening to the institution of marriage; to the meaning of integrity; to respect for the elderly; to respect for other people's beliefs and opinions?

The internal workings of the Daily staff apparently did not contain one person who objected sufficiently to prevent publication of that issue. I can't believe it. All those students have been obviously well trained by their "freedom of the press" professors! They have all been taught to print anything because the press is free! And the courts will protect them.

I am very disappointed in the fact that President Magrath didn't publicly condemn that issue and the people responsible for it as soon as he saw it. In addition, he should have expelled those responsible and reprimanded the instructors and professors who condoned it.

Yes, I take exception to your approval of the Daily issue. I take exception to using six pages in our magazine to publish their defense of the issue. I take exception to the language I've seen in many issues of the Daily.

For Cryin' Out Loud

I RECENTLY READ IN Minnesota about the scientist at the University doing research on tears ("He had a Bawl . . . Or Should Have," June 1980).

Recently, I saw an Indian film entitled "Aradhana" . . . I've never cried so much while seeing a film as I did when I saw (this one).

The film may provide subjects with tears needed for the research.

I've seen "Bryan's Song" and "Sundays with Cybele" but neither moved me as much.

Don't Forget Griggs

I IN THE FEBRUARY 1980 issue of Minnesota, an article entitled "Famous Alumni: Anyone Missing," was featured. In reading the article I was surprised that the name of former Regent Richard L. Griggs, of Duluth was not included under the heading business or sports.

Since his graduation from the University of Minnesota in 1907, Regent Emeritus Griggs has had a long and distinguished career and has served the University of Minnesota in many ways.

Griggs' career in business has been extensive and varied. He has been president, owner, founder and driving force in companies such as the Greyhound Corporation, the Northern City National Bank, and the First National Bank of St. Petersburg, Florida. Surely these activities and contributions should qualify him for listing under the category, Business.

In the field of sports, Griggs was also very active and successful. Following his fourth term (24 years) as a regent of the University of Minnesota, Griggs went into big game hunting in a big way. Starting in 1963 and continuing until 1978 he participated in 40 major safaris on five continents and in 20 countries. In recognition of his skill and accomplishments Griggs was awarded the Klineburger Trophy by Game Conservation International in 1973. At that time he was recognized as the top senior big game hunter in the world.

I felt I needed to make you fully aware of the reasons why Regent Emeritus Griggs should be identified as one of the University of Minnesota's famous and/or distinguished graduates.

Robert L. Heller, Provost

A Mouthful

"VOMITORIES" SEEMED AN unpleasant word, almost certainly related with nausea and its consequences, right? Right, but with an additional unusual meaning (and the one intended by the author of "Rarig Center," Minnesota October 1980).

In ancient Rome, vomitories were the gates (and subsequently the passageways leading to the gates) giving access to the arena.

I can't find any source dealing with the origin of the word in that sense; we can speculate that it was through these gates that the gladiators, entertainers, and soon-to-be-martyred Christians "spewed forth" into the arena.

Twin Cities and coordinate campuses show gains

More Students, More Women, Fewer Dollars

STUDENT ENROLLMENT at the University of Minnesota has hit a record 58,705.

Figures released by the Office of Admissions and Records show enrollment up on all of the five University campuses, with 2,416 more students attending this quarter than in the previous quarter of fall 1979.

Enrollment on the Twin Cities campus is now up to 47,386, a figure that surpasses the previous record set in 1976, when 45,810 students were enrolled. This year's Twin Cities figure is a 3.4 percent increase over last year, with 1,598 more students attending.

Colleges on the Twin Cities campus showing the greatest enrollment increases are General College (13.9 percent) and the Institute of Technology (7.6 percent). Students enrolled in General College this fall number 3,348 or 411 more than last fall; students in IT number 5,652, or 402 more than last fall.

Enrollment in the College of Liberal Arts (CLA), the University's largest college, increased by 4.5 percent, or 778 students, from last fall.

Record enrollments were reported in IT and CLA. A total of 246 more students are enrolled in IT than in 1946, when the previous record was set. The CLA total is 299 higher than the previous record, established in 1969.

Morris campus enrollment jumped 12 percent, from 1,450 students last fall to 1,624 students this year. At Duluth, the student population grew 8.2 percent, from 6,831 to 7,393; Crookston's enrollment increased 6.3 percent, from 1,109 to 1,179; and enrollment at Waseca increased 1 percent, from 1,111 to 1,123.

University officials credit the sagging economy and the fact that more students are deciding to remain in school for the increase in enrollment. Of those enrolled this quarter, 34,836 continued from spring quarter.

"Minnesotans must understand, however, that in addition to the record-setting enrollments, the University is experiencing a record-setting retrenchment in its state budgetary support," University President C. Peter Magrath said. "This means we will have to serve more students with fewer dollars. Should this erosion in state fiscal support continue, the very quality of this institution will be jeopardized."

The number of women attending the University rose 4.7 percent, an increase that keeps the percentage of women students at 45, the same as last year.

The University's 4.2 percent increase in total enrollment over last fall is one of the highest among the Big 10 universities for which figures are available. Enrollment at the University of Iowa increased this year by 7.5 percent, bringing its total to 25,100 students; University of Wisconsin enrollment is 45,000, a 3 percent increase over last year. Judith Raunig-Graham

Tuition Increase

STUDENTS IN THE College of Liberal Arts on the Twin Cities campus, the largest body of students, will have to pay $340 for classes winter and spring quarters, an increase of $31 a quarter. The tuition surcharge comes on top of a 7 percent tuition increase approved last year for classes this year.

Although the top priority in making the cuts was to protect all segments of the University directly involved with teaching, about 50 positions for graduate assistants were cut, said Kenneth Keller, vice president for academic affairs.

The loss of those positions will mean larger classes in some cases and fewer people available to grade papers, Keller said. "We had to cut about 50, and a cut of one is serious," he said.

Student plans to protect the budget cuts by boycotting classes and marching on the state capitol are aimed at state government and not at the regents or the University administration, student Joe McLaughlin told the board. McLaughlin is chairman of the student representatives to the Board of Regents.

Many departments have made their own budget cuts by decreasing their spending for supplies, expenses and equipment. "Much of this will be in travel, which will take a toll in faculty development and outreach," Magrath said in a letter to the board. "Another hard-hit area will be duplication costs, which will reduce our ability to provide students . . . with printed class material to supplement lectures and discussions." Elizabeth Petrangelo

Emergency Tuition Hike

TUITION AT THE University of Minnesota is up 10 percent winter and spring quarters as part of a plan to recoup a $14.1 million loss in the University budget caused by the state fiscal emergency.

The action to raise tuition temporarily was approved on a 1-0 vote by the University Board of Regents.

The tuition "surcharge" will raise $3.5 million and affect 58,705 day students as well as thousands of evening-class students on all five campuses.

The board also authorized the University's administration to borrow up to $5 million to help cover part of the loss. No loans will be taken out until closer to the end of the fiscal year, when exact needs will be known, said C. T. Johnson, acting vice president for finance.

Calling the actions "joyless" and "reluctant," University President C. Peter Magrath described to the regents his plan for making the $14.1 million cutback through a combination of tuition increases, bank loans and internal budget cuts of $5.8 million.

The cut was made necessary by the projected $195 million deficit in the state's budget, which will leave all state-supported institutions with less money than planned for the year. The University receives 36 percent of its support from the state.

Enrollment on the University's five campuses reached an all-time high this year. Magrath told the board that "while there is an economic recession, there is no recession in the demand for education." Elizabeth Petrangelo

Keating Heads Campus Fund

STEPHEN F. KEATING, retired president and chairman of the board of Honeywell, has accepted the 1980-81 national chairmanship of the Minnesota Fund, the campus-wide fund of the University of Minnesota Foundation.

Keating is a trustee of the University Foundation and is a member of its Presidents Club. He earned a bachelor's degree at the University and is a member of the Law School's class of 1942. He joined Honeywell in 1948 and before his retirement as vice chairman of the board of directors in July 1980, he had served as a vice president, executive vice president, the corporation's sixth president, chief executive officer and chairman of the board.

The Minnesota Fund, launched in 1979, reaches more than 180,000 alumni nationwide, requesting gift support for the University. A small-gift campaign, the Minnesota Fund provides resources to programs for which traditional funding sources are not available. Mary S. Kiheri

Frederick Bohem New Finance Veep

WHEN FREDERICK M. BOHEM takes over as the new financial vice president at the University of Minnesota in January, he'll be on familiar ground.

The University is trying to trim more than $14 million from its budget for the current fiscal year because of a projected $195 million deficit in the state's budget. As assistant secretary for management and budget for the federal Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), Bohem last March was forced to cut the department's budget by more than a billion dollars by presidential order.

"I have lived with fiscal crisis. It is never pleasant, but in times like these it doesn't surprise me," Bohem said from his office in Washington, D.C.

"His Washington experience and his impressive management background make his appointment especially exciting," said President C. Peter Magrath. "Mr. Bohem's acceptance is a good sign for the University."

As vice president for finance and operations, Bohem will be responsible for all of the business and operating functions of the University, including preparation of the annual budget and the operating and capital requests for funds from the legislature.

He also will oversee construction and design of University buildings, purchasing, data processing and all other auxiliary services.

Bohem will succeed C. T. Johnson, who has been acting vice president since Donald P. Brown resigned last March to return to private industry.

Bohem has been assistant secretary for management and budget for what used to be called the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) since November 1978. He joined HEW in 1977 as chief of staff to Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. after a year and a half at the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education. At Carnegie, Bohem was staff director for studies on federal organization for higher education and on federal-state relations in higher education.

As a member of the White House staff from 1966 to 1968, Bohem was executive director of President Lyndon B. Johnson's Task Force on Government Organization and later staff assistant to Johnson.

Bohem was director of news and public affairs for WNET-TV in New York from 1973 to 1974, assistant to the president of the Ford Foundation from 1969 to 1972, and executive editor of the Public Broadcast Laboratory of National Education Television from 1968 to 1969.

"This is a very big decision for me," said the 43-year-old Bohem, who has never lived in the Midwest. "What really attracted me was the knowledge that I would be working with an institution that is absolutely first class both in the state and in the nation." Elizabeth Petrangelo

The Fourwise Man

"I WAS A YOUNG instructor," Karlis Kaufmanis recalls, "when a bunch of girls entered my room and asked, 'What is the Star of Bethlehem?'"

"Well, of course," he notes, "I had heard of the Star of Bethlehem at the church and had seen its image in display windows once in a while, but I had never thought about what it actually was. So I started making up stories."

"I said, 'Well, perhaps it was a nova, a supernova, or a comet with a long tail.'"

"I saw then the faces of my young ladies turn longer and longer. They said, 'Thank you,' and as they left my room I overheard one of them say, 'He does not know it either.'"

"I was about to hang myself," Kaufmanis says, laughing. "I was just a few years older than the students, proud of my youth and my knowledge, and here suddenly I failed in front of young ladies. Well, that was just the beginning. . . ."

Indeed it was. After that incident at the University of Latvia more than 40 years ago, Professor Kaufmanis says, "I got so mad at that star I started studying it." He has since delivered nearly 900 lectures on "The Star of Bethlehem" on college campuses, to civic and church groups and on radio and television as well, including the Voice of America and ABC's "Good Morning America" program. He and his lecture have also been featured in the Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune and in People magazine.

What the three wise men followed to Bethlehem was not really a star, Kaufmanis has concluded from his studies, but actually the appearance of Jupiter and Saturn so close together they looked like an unusually bright star. The particular position of those two planets in the sky also carried special meaning for Jewish astrologers at the time, he says, who watched planetary motions for prophesied signs of the birth of the Messiah. The three wise men, he suggests, may have been Babylonian astrologers convinced of Christ's birth after witnessing an astronomical rarity that occurs only once every 800 years or so.

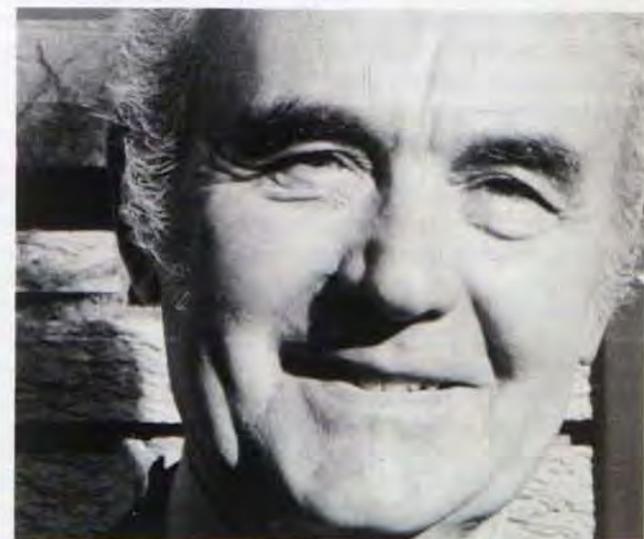

But the popularity of "The Star of Bethlehem" lecture has perhaps as much to do with the charm of the lecturer as his subject matter. He begins his lecture with this disclaimer: "When I came to this country about a century ago, I had every intention to learn your beautiful language. I have failed."

Kaufmanis lectures with that carefully considered cadence characteristic of someone speaking outside his native tongue. The well-modulated East European accent lends an exotic aspect to the retired University astronomy professor's dignified demeanor, though. It strikes the ear midrange between the ominous intonations of Bela Lugosi and the bubbly exuberance of Lawrence Welk.

"I have lots of off-campus lectures, particularly now during the Christmas season, that carry me from one part of the state to another," he says. "On Sundays, I have as many as three, or even four speeches scheduled in one day. Actually, they never stop entirely. I have been giving the lecture even in July and August."

Besides lecturing, Kaufmanis says he has kept busy since his retirement two and a half years ago, with "some writing and lots of reading." He has "very little time" for science fiction, he says, because "there is so much to read of real science."

These days Karlis Kaufmanis writes and reads, but no science fiction.

Recently he completed an astronomy section for an earth sciences textbook published by McGraw-Hill and has authored or co-authored 20 other textbooks used in both Europe and America. When discussing his long teaching career, though, it's obvious that the professor misses something in his retirement — his students.

"Teaching has been really my profession, my hobby, my life. . . . Yah," he says, "I cried after my last lecture, with all the roses I got and the kiss from a beautiful coed."

The same humor and enthusiasm that permeates his "Star of Bethlehem" presentation drew hundreds of students each quarter to hear his lectures in room 150 of the Physics building. During his 16 years at the University, Kaufmanis estimates that about 30,000 students took his introductory astronomy courses, including extension and summer session classes. He won the College of Liberal Arts Distinguished Teacher Award and when he retired, the Kaufmanis Speakers' Fund was established in his honor to bring distinguished scientists to the University to promote public education in astronomy.

"I do not know whether I am a good teacher," Kaufmanis says modestly. "Teaching is a gift, which of course, can be developed. I worked very hard at it. It didn't come easily to me."

To illustrate his point he recounts the painstaking method he used to perfect a 16-lecture series on astronomy broadcast in 1964, for which he won the Katie Award for the best performance on Minnesota Educational Television.

"I spent, on the average, about 20 hours preparing for each half hour on TV. First, at home preparing the material and then I used my tape recorder. I made the speech into the tape recorder, and then I listened and pretended that I didn't know the subject. Would I be able to understand it? And, of course, I found a number of places where I was dissatisfied, so I changed my speech and again used my tape recorder. In some cases, I repeated it as many as five or six times."

"Well, by the time I was in front of the cameras I knew it by heart, and all I had to do was just to think of the presentation — to smile when I was supposed to smile and be sad when I was supposed to be sad. And then it appears to people that it comes so easily."

"You will not believe it," he adds, "I taught for 48 years, but I worked for each and every lecture until the very last lecture. I never entered the classroom without knowing what I will do. So it has not come very easily to me."

To a certain extent each lecture is "a performance," Kaufmanis says, "and I do believe it should be that way. Why should the students suffer because the teacher is lazy?"

"A performer tries to make his act interesting and enjoyable and this is what I have tried to do. Sometimes I have succeeded and sometimes not."

For one of the more dramatic demonstrations in his astronomy course Kaufmanis used a shiny metal sphere the size of a volleyball suspended from the ceiling by a thin wire. After touching the sphere to his forehead, he would release it in an arc over the heads of hundreds of anxious students and then continue his lecture while the huge pendulum remained swinging over the audience. After several minutes he would point out that the pendulum was apparently shifting its direction of swing slowly in a clockwise direction. What actually was happening, he would explain, was that the earth was rotating beneath the pendulum from west to east. This replication of the classic Foucault pendulum experiment, first performed in the Pantheon in Paris in 1851, seldom failed to hold the attention of students, he says, "because the people are sitting there waiting to see — will it turn, or will it not turn?"

"I never entered the classroom without knowing what I will do."

Kaufmanis first became intrigued with astronomy while fulfilling degree requirements at a state teacher's college in Latvia, and then went on to advanced degrees in astronomy and mathematics at the university in Riga in 1939 and 1943. But a year later he was deported to Austria along with many other young Latvians as the Germans retreated from the Russian advance near the end of World War II. He taught at a German prep school for three years after the war before immigrating to the United States in 1949 to teach at Gustavus Adolphus College in St. Peter, Minn. When he left in 1962 to teach at the University, students there established a scholarship in his name.

Astronomy is a mandatory course in many European high schools, Kaufmanis notes, lamenting that "some people (in America) graduate from college and do not know the difference between a star and a planet."

"I do believe that Sputnik and Khrushchev were one of the greatest blessings for the United States' education," he maintains. "Then suddenly the National Science Foundation got money, and there were institutes all across the country.

"But then (the war in) Vietnam worked terribly against science," he adds. "Then people were concerned with social sciences and said science does no good. It's turning slowly the other way now, perhaps because you hear on TV practically every day that the Russians are ahead of us. Americans are starting to realize that science isn't so bad after all, and that it should be taught, if we want to survive."

The growing public interest in science is evident in the burgeoning market for science-related magazines and in the current success of "Cosmos." Hosted by Cornell University astronomer

Carl Sagan, it is the most popular program ever produced by the national public television network.

Recently the University's astronomy department established a public information service called "Starwatch" — a continuing series of monthly tape-recorded mini-lectures available to anyone calling (612) 376-5587. When Kaufmanis was asked to record a Starwatch tape last spring he decided to combine his astronomical knowledge once again with Biblical information — this time to calculate possible dates for the crucifixion. When the story was picked up by both national news wires, Kaufmanis found himself an instant national celebrity.

"It was seven o'clock in the morning and I was still in bed," he recalls, "when the telephone rang. It was a radio station in New York. When the phone rang again, it was Detroit, then it was Pittsburgh, and then St. Louis. . . . The telephone was ringing all day with calls, mostly from radio stations all over. One from Albuquerque, another from Los Angeles and even from Ottawa. And so for a day I felt like President Carter, you know, like a big, great, great man," he says. "But that was only for 24 hours."

Still, to many of his former students, Karlis Kaufmanis remains something of a celebrity and his "Star of Bethlehem" lecture has become a holiday tradition for many others.

"There are always people who tell me they have come twice or three times," he says, beaming. "My greatest thrill this Christmas will be speaking in Alaska. It will be my longest trip." AM

'We want to spend our lives together, not apart'

Matriculation of a Modern Marriage

by Beth Ann Krier

THE TWO PROFESSORS met while they were students at University of California, Los Angeles, in what she recalls as "a typical library hustle — if you've ever been on the second floor of the UCLA library, that's all that goes on."

Beth Ann Krier is a staff writer for the Los Angeles Times. This article was copyrighted in the 1980 Los Angeles Times and is reprinted by permission.

But the follow-through has been far from predictable. In fact, Elaine Tyler and Lary May so eschewed traditional sex roles that when they married a year later, in 1970, it was with the intention of creating a workable, two-career marriage that allowed equal time for full-fledged family life, too.

Ten years, three children, one shared teaching job and two books later, they say their efforts have been worthwhile but not particularly easy.

"It's been a struggle to get across the idea that job sharing can work," says Elaine, a historian who shares with her husband the title of assistant professor of American Studies at the University of Minnesota, one of the few institutions the Mayses have found receptive to the notion of two people performing a single job. "Academia had almost no provisions for people like us. We have to maneuver within the state bureaucracy to share the position without losing important benefits, like tenure, sabbaticals and other things."

Yet they would have it no other way. They ruled out commuter marriage ("We want to spend our lives together, not apart, and that's essentially what a commuter marriage means") and the idea of one partner more involved in his or her profession than the other. They've tried working full time simultaneously but found it left time for little else.

As they search for new solutions in their lives, ways to increase the joy and meaningfulness in both personal and professional careers, they write about the ways in which preceding generations grappled with similar tasks. In separate books to be published this fall — hers is "Great Expectations: Marriage and Divorce in Post-Victorian America" (University of Chicago Press), his "Screening Out the Past: The Birth of Mass Culture and the Motion Picture Industry" (Oxford University Press) — both Mayses explore the impact traditional sex roles have had on America.

"One of the themes of both of our books has been women's discontent in the home," says Lary, 36. "And in this home we've done everything to insure there would be a broad range of career options. We've totally rejected traditional sex roles as being problematic on a societal and a personal level."

"We both really worked on both books," adds 32-year-old Elaine. "It would have been conceivable for our books to have swapped titles. Lary looked through public institutions to get to what's going on in private institutions. I looked at private institutions to get to the public."

In "Screening Out the Past," Lary argues that movies were perhaps the most powerful national institution offering private solutions to public issues. As the film industry developed into a major urban institution in the first two decades of the century, he writes, it expressed the larger implications of a new life, focusing on familial, political and economic issues. "Women were no longer the ascetic mothers of the past. Nor were corporate men totally consumed by their work. Together the sexes learned from the Hollywood lifestyle how to find individualism and expressiveness in leisure."

In her study of the American pursuit of happiness and its directions at the turn of the century, Elaine discovered that "men and women turned to each other and to the home in a fervent personal quest, dramatically reflected in the rising rate of marriage and the soaring rate of divorce." She documented hundreds of court cases from the era when marital breakdown rose most rapidly and divorced individuals were considered social mishaps or moral deviants.

"But is divorce really a liberation?" she asks in the epilogue of "Great Expectations." "Do people discard matrimony in favor of other alternatives — or do they merely move on in a perpetual quest for 'the perfect relationship?' My own feeling is that personal life has become a national obsession. It is not likely the domestic domain will ever be able to satisfy completely the enormous hopes for individual fulfillment brought to it. As long as the American pursuit of happiness continues along this private path, divorce is likely to be with us."

Both the Mayses grew up in Los Angeles with a bit of Hollywood in their blood. Lary's stepfather is Larry Storch, the actor and comedian. Elaine's father was Edward Tyler, a physician who moonlighted as a writer for Groucho Marx's "You Bet Your Life."

They met while he was a graduate student and she a senior at UCLA. While they finished their doctorates in history from UCLA, they taught at Princeton University but the notion of a shared teaching contract didn't work out there. They say they're happy at Minnesota — "we're actually getting used to the weather" — but they deeply miss Southern California, where they spend summers in the Venice home they bought while in graduate school.

The tight academic job market, complicated with the Mayses' requirement for a shared contract, hasn't yet aligned their job preference with the perfect locale.

"The institutions really have not given," claims Lary. "We've been trying to argue that they can keep their institutions intact and we can fulfill needs for them. It's amazing how few institutions will even consider it."

Even when they do, however, the Mayses insist it's advisable to have help. In their case, Omri Shochatovitz, a former kibbutznik and swimming champion whom they met in Los Angeles several summers ago, became an adopted member of their family. He moved to Minnesota with them, helps look after the children and is a pre-med student at the University.

"You can't do it alone," cautions Elaine. "The burden is to make ends meet with one salary. We sometimes have to teach extra courses or take outside jobs. But this year (after completing their books) you couldn't have bribed us to stay and teach summer school."

What might be a problem of competitiveness between the two as colleagues as well as marriage partners has apparently not developed.

"We both recognize we have different strengths. That way we can help each other and participate in each other's work without threatening each other," says Elaine, explaining that in scholarly concerns, Lary leans more to the arts, she to social sciences. "We do know many couples in the same field who went to graduate school together and did compete and who are no longer married to each other. We do have an extremely good working relationship and we cooperate in virtually every project."

And there is no fear they are becoming the same person, unable to tell where one ends and the other begins.

"We're too different," says Elaine. "Our personalities are very different."

Asked for some specifics, she hesitates a moment, then replies, "We argue a lot, how's that? Or rather we disagree on a lot of things." Reconsidering the question, she later adds that where her husband is shy, she is more sociable; he is driven, she is calm, and where he is emotional, she is level-headed.

"People have often teased and said, 'Do you talk history at the dinner table,'" offers Elaine. "Sure. Why not? But we also talk non-academics at school."

The mixture of personal with professional pursuits, however, does have a few drawbacks. In trying to understand the 20th Century through its films, Lary has found it hard to enjoy movies as much as he once did.

"Sometimes you can be watching a film and not enjoying it because you're thinking about it so much," he says. "I wish for a little while I could get this monkey off my back."

Adds his wife, "But I have to say that doing a book on marriage hasn't prevented me from enjoying it." AA

Let's face it, a professor says . . .

You Are What You Look At

Harvey Sarles and Pepper pose for a do-they-look-alike? comparison. Chuck Ruhr Advertising Inc., Minneapolis, won a Cleo award (the Oscar of the advertising world) for their Tuffy's dog food commercial featuring dogs eating with their look-alike owners (opposite page).

WHEN UNIVERSITY anthropology professor Harvey B. Sarles went to a dog show recently he was more interested in looking at man, than at 'man's best friend.'

"There's a lot of folklore about people looking like their dogs, so I went to a dog show to check it out," Sarles explains. "Some of them did look like their dogs," he reports. "Not everyone, but there were some people, I think, that it was definitely true of.

"There was a certain body build that seemed to be predominant there," he says. "There were no long-legged people. They were tall and short, but not long-legged in comparison to their torsos. . . .

Most dogs," he notes, "look quite blocky, or even-sized, so maybe there's some relationship there."

Sarles was most interested, however, in similarities between the faces of dogs and their owners at the show.

"Humans are into faces and I think we buy dogs to a large extent because of what they look like. But a lot of people use their dogs' faces for feedback too, and to tell the truth," he adds, "dogs' faces don't tell you a hell of a lot. I think that people who spend a lot of time with dogs reduce their facial movements — that's my guess. That's why they start looking like each other."

Sarles' conjectures about why dogs and their owners sometimes look alike, are derived from a theory he has developed that would also explain why some marriage partners seem to look more like one another with each passing year. Our faces may be shaped as much by social factors, Sarles suggests, as by our physical inheritance. His theory is based, in part, on the observations of Charles Darwin, as well as on his own work as a linguist and his interest in functional anatomy.

Just as children readily learn languages and dialects through imitation, Sarles points out, infants naturally mimic adult faces and learn to associate facial expressions with their corresponding emotions. "(O)ne tends to 'use' his face much like the people in his family (and) community," he maintains. These "facial dialects" we acquire may also alter our appearance over time, he believes.

"A lot of how you look has to do with which facial muscles you use and those you don't," he says, because "muscles shape bone over a long period of time." Besides muscle tone, bones will also accommodate themselves to other pressures applied to them continuously, he notes, such as dental braces. "The fact that we continue to look relatively alike" he maintains "is largely due to holding and using our facial muscles in about the same ways as the people around us."

If Sarles' theory proves correct it would account for a phenomenon noted by Franz Boas, the founder of American anthropology. In a series of papers he documented that the third generation children of Italian and Jewish immigrants had rounder heads and smaller noses than their forebearers, even when there was no marriage outside their ethnic groups. Boas' observations suggested that environment plays a large part in determining our appearance, but he didn't know which factors were most important.

Assuming your face is altered by the expressions you adopt, Sarles also postulates that you may begin to look more like someone "if you spend a lot of time with them and learn to read the nuances of their expressions very carefully.

"I think a lot of families work like that," he says. "If you see a certain look you've seen in a certain situation over 20 or 30 years, you don't need much more than that to recreate a whole range of common experiences," he says.

"In an older, long-term marriage people are extraordinarily sensitive to the subtleties of facial expressions. If you react very much alike," Sarles says, "then you begin to look alike (because) you're using the same kinds of (facial) movements for the same expressions.

"A fair number of people do marry someone that looks like themselves or like someone in their family," he notes, but adds that his theory would explain why some couples' faces seem to grow more alike as years go by.

If Sarles is right, you may want to spend less time with your pet and more time with your spouse. L.L.E.

Students will tour the Economics Laboratory in St. Paul on Tuesday, Jan. 13, 1981, as part of the Corporate Tours Program sponsored by the CBA Alumni Society's board of directors.

Women's Team Strong Nationally

IN A RECENT NATIONAL poll, the Minnesota Gopher Women's basketball team was listed as a "dark horse" to challenge for the national crown.

According to coach Ellen Mosher, the Gophers will indeed be strong contenders for the crown.

According to the team, they would like to settle for nothing less than their best.

"The team is really excited about the season," she said. "All the girls are very enthusiastic and are putting out a lot of effort because they realize what kind of team we have. They're all anxious to get going into the season because for the first time they realize they can play with any team in the nation."

The Gophers didn't just pull a magic player out of their hat, nor did they come from nowhere to achieve national prominence. This year's roster is identical to last's, with the addition of several top-notch recruits.

Returnees include centers Linda Roberts and Cindy Kuhlman; forwards Martha Dahlen, Carol Brownlee, Mary Manderfeld, and Karen Swanson; and guards Christine Durand, Robin Dabareiner, Debbie Hunter, Gail Sederski and Tammy Manly.

Add to this list recruits Christy Boles, a 1980 junior college All-American from Southwestern Community College (Iowa); Barb Meredith, 1980 Associated Press and Minneapolis All-State selection and finalist in the Miss Minnesota Basketball Competition (Mankato East); and Mary Dressen, 1980 AP All-State selection and second-leading scorer in Minnesota high school history (with 1,992 career points) from Browerville High School.

Boosting the Gophers' team even more will be Laura Gardner, who returns after being red-shirted last year with a knee injury after a sensational freshman campaign.

Mosher noted that all the women came back in excellent physical condition, and are not letting up.

"The girls showed up in really good shape. They've learned how to dedicate themselves," Mosher said. "I think they have matured to the point where they realize that basketball isn't just a November through March thing, but a year-around commitment.

The girls are very enthusiastic about the season so they've been running and lifting weights all summer and still do every day. Right now I'm just trying to generate some enthusiasm among the student body because I'm real optimistic about the year. This season is the first year that we've had some good teams here to play us. For once we're good enough and recognized as a power so teams are coming here to play," she said.

Going into the season, Mosher sees only one major weakness in her team.

"Our one weakness may be our size inside," Mosher said. "Linda Roberts will be playing center for us and she's only 6 feet. A lot of the girls she'll be playing against will be 6-3 or 6-4.

"Right now I think that is our only glaring weakness," she said. "One problem we had last year that we hope to eliminate this year simply because of experience is our number of turnovers. We had to start freshmen at the guard positions and things like that so inexperience hurt us a lot. Another problem we had last year that we hope to change was our balance because we only carried 11 players. That really hurt us, especially at the big positions when we had to substitute."

As for the strengths, "This year we have excellent balance and strength and quickness so we're going to run and run and run and then press. With the numbers and the quality of players we have we won't have to fall off when we substitute. We will be able to put out a sustained effort for the entire game."

In Mosher's fourth year at Minnesota, her first goal is to get by the first round of the regional tournament. In her previous three years here, a different format has been used to set up first round matches and with each format the Gophers have ended up playing perennial powerhouse Kansas State in the first round — a team they have yet to get past. This year the teams will be seeded into the tournament so the Gophers look to start with a lesser team.

Although the regional tournament may have been their nemesis in the past, the Gophers don't seem too worried about the end of the season. Right now as they continue their three-hour daily workouts, they are perfectly satisfied to take games one at a time.

Mosher admits that both Kansas State along with Kansas will again be strong and will battle Minnesota for the lone national tournament berth from the region, but she is quick to point out, "they'll both be tough, but we have a lot more experience and depth than we've ever had before."

Constituent society leaders face 1980's challenge

Society Leaders Refine Skills, Share Ideas

ALUMNI LEADERS, collegiate deans and officers representing 20 constituent alumni societies and collegiate units met at the Campus Club in early November to work on their leadership skills.

Two societies were cited for achievements:

Dentistry Alumni Society received the "Excellence in Programming Award," and the Institute of Technology earned the "Membership Achievement Award."

Membership in Dentistry exceeds, at 21.2 percent, the percentage of membership in any other alumni society.

Associate Director and Director of Constituent Societies James Day, in making the award, noted that membership is a function of good programs and that dentistry's programs provided enrichment for alumni, through continuing education, students, alumni sponsored scholarships, social events and seniors day, and the college.

Dentistry equipped the continuing education room for the school. And more than 500 association members attend their annual meetings.

In winning the "Membership Achievement Award," The Institute of Technology increased membership by 1.2 percent in 1979-80, the highest of any alumni society. A society with established strength in programming, IT presented its annual "Science and Technology Day" seminar in November with more than 800 taking part.

In presenting the awards, Day stressed that many alumni societies, big, new, and small, achieved major success in the past year and commended the Biological Sciences Alumni Society, the Agriculture Alumni Society, and Industrial Relations Society and the Home Economics Alumni Society.

Breaking into groups after the awards presentations, the volunteers took part in workshops on membership promotion and student involvement, effective communication, goal setting, sustaining leadership, and programming for visibility. Workshops were presented by the Alumni Association's professional staff.

"We had a very motivated group of leaders," said Day, "and I was gratified to have such good representation from the collegiate administrations. One of our major points was that alumni societies need to match their efforts with the agendas of their collegiate units."

While the purpose of Leadership Day was to refine skills and share ideas, an underlying theme was essentially competitive in nature: growth and success in the Alumni Association can mean substantial support and strength for the University in the coming years, which experts agree will be trying times for higher education. "We have a great opportunity for advancement in the 1980's," said Day, "and that's a lot more than most other places can say. I'd like to see us seize that opportunity. It's a real challenge. One of the best places to start is with the constituent society program, which works college by college for the University. Sixty-five percent of our alumni live in the Twin Cities area. This is their avenue to participate in the progress of the University."

MAA staff members and their society assignments: James Day: Agriculture, Biological Sciences, Industrial Relations, Medicine, Nursing. Chris Reynolds: Education, General College, Institute of Technology, Medical Technology, Veterinary Medicine. Linda Hartley: Alumnae Club, CLA, Home Economics, Nurse Anesthetists, Pharmacy, Social Work. Jim Barnum: Band Alumni, Dentistry, Mortuary Science. Gretchen Roufs: Business. Dick Haines: Journalism.

Special Events Director Picked

CHRISTIN T. Reynolds has been named assistant director for special events for the Minnesota Alumni Association.

She will coordinate activities for the faculty-alumni dialogues, alumni college, and other special events throughout the year.

In addition she will represent these constituent societies: Institute of Technology, Veterinary Medicine, Medical Technology, Education, and General College.

She recently served as a legislative assistant to U.S. Rep. David Bonior, 12th District of Michigan, from 1978 to 1980. Prior to that she was legislative assistant to U.S. Rep. Tom Harkin, 5th District of Iowa.

Born in Vicksburg, Miss., she was graduated from high school at Rustin, La., in 1970. In 1974 she received a bachelor's degree from Iowa State University.

"I am excited about working on the University campus," she said, "and I am looking forward to meeting with people who have been working on special events." Her husband, Kevin Walli, is a legislative assistant to U.S. Rep. Jim Oberstar, 8th District of Minnesota.

66th Homecoming

THEY PAID $25 to hear Richard Bach, author of "Jonathan Livingston Seagull," talk about death, life, happiness, and success. They paid up to $10 to hear comedian Bob Hope tell jokes. And they paid $3.50 to hear Pulitzer-Prize-winning poet Howard Nemerov talk about his poetry and his novel, "The Homecoming Game."

It was all part of the 66th annual Homecoming Day at the University of Minnesota and although the Gophers lost the who-gets-the-Little-Brown-Jug game with Michigan (14 to 37) your Minnesota Alumni Association (MAA) considered the day, in fact the whole week, a success.

For one thing there were concurrent society events, which included socials, seminars, and some seriousness: a parade, decorations, and a queen (track star Rocky Racette).

It really started on Friday night when the MAA was host to a Michigan-Minnesota warm-up party at the Thunderbird Hotel, Bloomington.

Door prizes were given; cheerleaders did the polka with alumni; Paul Giel, Minnesota athletic director, talked; and Steve Roszell, MAA executive director, introduced his counterpart at Michigan, Bob Forman. The Minnesota Alumni band played throughout the evening.

The band also was on hand Saturday morning at Northrop Auditorium where members of the MAA Student Board served box lunches.

In addition the student board helped promote Homecoming, took part in a bonfire event, and organized an after-the-game party.

Inside Northrop there were cheers and music and then the group went outside and heard the Minnesota Marching Band give a short concert on the steps.

Just before kickoff, as tradition has it, the alumni marched with the band to Memorial Stadium.

On a subsequent nationally televised show featuring Bob Hope, the halftime ceremony, which featured Hope and President C. Peter Magrath and a host of other dignitaries, was seen by millions.

Two Homecoming events sponsored by the Minnesota Alumni Association included a warm-up party for Michigan and Minnesota fans. In these photos, clockwise, a Minnesota guest dances with Rich Slagle, a cheerleader. Here is one of the youngest Minnesota supporters at the box lunch gathering in Northrop. Bob Hope entertained at half-time and during an evening performance at Northrop. Half-time guests included from left, Dave Winfield, Bob Hope, President C. Peter Magrath, and Ron Simon, president of the MAA. Cheerleader Sue Pribyl dances with Gerald J. "Jerry" Griffin, '33, of Park Rapids, a quarterback for Bernie Bierman. Cheerleaders Linda Litz and Rich Slagle welcome R. W. Hurrele, '32, of Rochester, a Rooter King who said: "I made all the football trips but with no bruises."

"MY REUNION WAS SUCH FUN! NOW, I WISH I COULD DO SOMETHING FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA, BUT . . ."

Many University of Minnesota alumni and friends wish that they could make current gifts to their University, but they are rightfully concerned about inflation and their future security.

The University is also concerned about the security of its graduates. What many don't realize is that by purchasing a gift annuity, disposable income can be increased by receiving:

- Partially tax-free income for the donor or loved one.
- Attractive returns for older donors and friends.
- Reduction of estate taxes.
- Reduction or postponement of capital gains taxes.
- The satisfaction of contributing to quality programs at the University during the donor's lifetime.

Interested? We are here to serve Minnesota's invaluable friends . . . people like you. For more information about how you can "receive by giving," return the coupon below, with no obligation, or call (612) 373-9934.

Please send me information on gift annuities.

A California Cowboy

HIS APPEARANCE is deceptive. Watching him riding the high ranges of Big Sky country, wearing a dusty Stetson, his lean frame moving with practised ease in the saddle, you'd never guess his profession.

And even when you see Robert K. Jaedicke's office at Stanford University the clues are misleading . . . the walls lined with Charles Russell prints of the Old West, models of cowboys, an old rolltop desk . . .

Yet, Jaedicke, '57, is one of the country's leading experts in accounting. He is the William R. Kimball professor of accounting at the Stanford Graduate School of Business, and served as acting dean until the recent arrival of Dean Rene McPherson. In September, Jaedicke became associate dean for academic affairs, sharing the title and work with Charles A. Holloway, professor of management science. After serving for a year in that capacity, Jaedicke plans to return to teaching and research.

Still, it is hard to associate this loose-limbed man with financial reporting, management accounting and academic administration.

The picture is complete only when you learn that he was born and reared in farm and ranch country, was riding before he was in his teens, and for the last 15 years has spent his summers and many other holiday periods, working on ranches in Montana, usually with his family.

When an interviewer suggested that accountancy and teaching seemed to be at the opposite end of the spectrum from cowboy life, the weathered lines around Jaedicke's bright blue eyes puckered in amusement.

"I suppose my career began during my three-year hitch in the Air Force" he said. "I volunteered at 17, and still could not legally buy a glass of beer when I was discharged at 20.

"I spent part of those three years as a crew member on the Berlin airlift, but I did some accounting before and after that experience. I rather liked it, so when I went to the University of Washington I studied it formally."

A Phi Beta Kappa graduate, he went on to get his doctorate at the University of Minnesota, then to become a Ford Foundation post-doctoral fellow and assistant professor of business administration at Harvard. He joined Stanford in 1961.

During the years Jaedicke has become a nationally recognized author of books and articles on accounting. The National Association of Accountants twice recognized his work with major awards. In 1966 the American Institute of CPA's honored him with its award for distinguished contribution to literature.

Jaedicke was reared in the small town of Hanover, Kan., which had been settled by his grandparents and other German emigrants. Until then it had been Indian territory, and Jaedicke's father was the first white child born in the outpost.

"I first learned to ride at eight or nine," said Jaedicke. "I started to work for farmers and ranchers in the same way that kids today work for fast-food outlets.

"World War II came along, and there were not many able-bodied adults to do the farming and ranching, so we boys did all the work we were physically capable of doing. My main interest always was working with horses. I once worked for four brothers who ran 20 teams of horses."

The interviewer then posed the question he had waited to ask all along: "If you could choose, which would you rather do — work on the range or at the Business School?"

"I love them both," Jaedicke replied. "I guess the way I divide it up now is the way to go." Donald Stokes

Move Over Rodgers & Hammerstein

WHEN THEY FIRST MET, Earl Buys and Terrance J. Lappin were involved in running a mock state government together at a summer civics program for high school student leaders in 1966. A chance meeting 12 years after that has led to a collaboration of an entirely different sort, however.

By 1978, when they renewed their acquaintance, both were former University of Minnesota students and professional artists — Lappin a playwright and poet, Buys a pianist and composer. At the time Lappin was looking for someone to compose music for a multi-media production of his play "Hit by a Cab" by the Olympia Arts Ensemble in Minneapolis. Lappin was delighted with the "precise and definite music" Buys composed, and so they agreed to seek funds for another joint venture.

"Psalm for Dead Ezra," a song cycle commissioned by St. Paul arts patron Gertrude Hill ffolliott, is the result of their latest collaboration. The lyrics, written by Lappin in honor of the late poet Ezra Pound, have been set to music by Buys. It will be premiered January 18 at 4 p.m. in the Frederick King Weyerhaeuser Auditorium of the Landmark Center in downtown St. Paul. The piece will be sung by bass Richard Johnson, a past winner of regional auditions for the Metropolitan Opera, along with Brahms' "Vier Ernste Gesänge."

Lappin, whose father Garth was captain of the 1948 and 1949 Gopher wrestling teams, studied playwrighting at the University with the encouragement of theater professor Charles Nolte after serving in the U.S. Marine Corps in the early 1970s. He was awarded the Shubert Prize in playwrighting in 1978 by Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Work on the song cycle with Buys was enhanced, Lappin says, by the fact that they were able to arrange funding for the project through a private benefactor. It has allowed them "complete artistic control" over the project, he says.

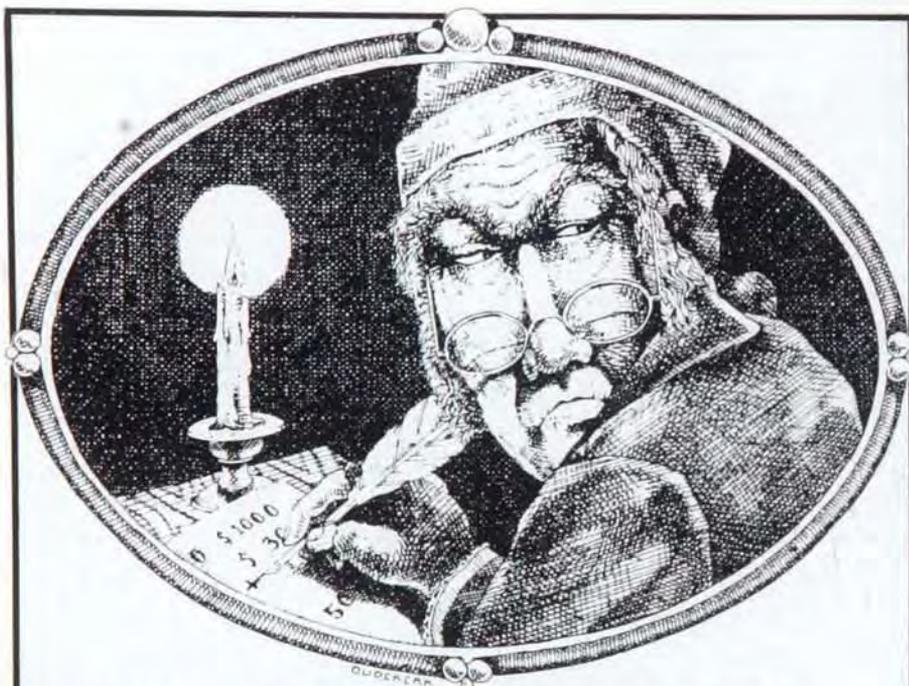

Buys agrees on the value of the artistic freedom afforded them by the private grant. "The only parameters have been our own imaginations," he says.

Buys is assistant music director for Opera St. Paul and, as pianist for the Sylmar Chamber Ensemble, is an artist-in-residence at the Minneapolis Institute of Arts. Buys has performed as a soloist and accompanist throughout the United States and plays regularly at Charlie's Cafe Exceptionale in Minneapolis.

Lappin supplements his writing income with odd jobs, such as painting the interior of the New French Cafe in downtown Minneapolis afterhours. Currently he is developing an adaptation of his stage play "Re Vera" for television. L.L.E.

SCROOGE NEVER ATTENDED MINNESOTA...

at least not that we know of

Too bad for old Ebenezer. Maybe he wouldn't have been such a miser. At least he would have learned earlier in life that you have to give a bit of yourself to make something worthwhile or rewarding.

After all, University of Minnesota graduates know what it means to work together for something they believe in. During 1980, thousands of alumni have recognized that their gifts are a key to keeping strong Minnesota's reputation for exceptional education.

Yet, we haven't heard from everyone. So if you haven't already made your annual gift to your alma mater, please be generous . . . before the new year is upon us. Alumni dollars for public higher education—it's an important tradition that we all share.

And season's greetings to you and yours from all of us at the University of Minnesota Foundation.

Our Price is Right

"IT WAS THE FIRST public performance, and I was the second one onstage," recalls Michael P. Price, '67. "We came up a big circular staircase, out of a trapdoor in the stage, and when I hit the top stair I fell flat on my face!"

As an actor in the University's 1961 production of "The Merchant of Venice" Michael Price may have been a flop, but as executive director of the Goodspeed Opera House in East Haddam, Conn., he has more than redeemed himself. Since he took the helm in 1968, the Goodspeed has sent three new musicals and three revivals to Broadway: "Annie," "Whoopie!" "Something's Afoot," "Very Good Eddie," "Going Up," and "Shenandoah." In June he was presented with a Special Tony Award for making the Goodspeed "a national repository of our popular American Musical Theatre. . . ."

The reason for the Goodspeed's remarkable string of successes on Broadway Price explains is quite simple — "We are the only theater in America dedicated to producing the American musical." The format he has established for each Goodspeed season includes only musicals — at least two revivals and a production of one new musical.

Located on the banks of the Connecticut River 120 miles northeast of New York City, the Goodspeed seems ideally situated as a summer stock theater. Extended runs have stretched its season to December 21, however, this year. Productions included George M. Cohan's "Little Johnny Jones," "The Happy Time" and a new musical, "Zapata."

As executive director, Price says his job "is a real blend of responsibilities. It's so much artistic, so much business, so much promotion and so much worrying about keeping the toilets clean." Much of the Goodspeed's success can be attributed to this careful attention to detail, he says. "Things began to click in 1971 when we really personalized it. In those days . . . I came to the theater every night and sat at the bottom of the staircase to say goodnight to the public, and as time went on I felt a rapport with the audience that is as important as building a rapport with my employees."

Price says he gained a sense for the business end of theater working in the box office in Scott Hall under the tutelage of University theater business manager Merle Loppnow. "I learned a lot from him," Price recalls, "including calling the box office the moment it is supposed to open to see if someone is there. I frequently had my key in the door at Scott Hall box office and heard the phone ringing and knew damn well it was Merle Loppnow calling."

But perhaps the real key to the success of the Goodspeed Opera House lies in a less tangible gift Price acquired somewhere along the line. "Instead of saying 'places,' when I was a stage manager I used to say, 'It's magic time,'" Price says, "and I still believe it is magic time." L.L.E.

Remember that old "lifetime guarantee" grabber that many advertisers used, and some still do?

You know, the ad went something like:

"Take a look at this magic pen. It's only 99 cents and it's guaranteed for life."

"Gee," you'd say to yourself, "that's a bargain. Buy one, never need another."

Well, what the advertiser did not tell you that the pen was guaranteed for its life and not yours. So that might mean it was good for only a couple of months or so before it — not you — wore out.

And the manufacturer fully expected you to run right out and buy a

More About Willa

IT WAS ABOUT this time of year. I remember my grandfather, Frank V. Hoyt, sitting there by the window in that nursing home, smoking his pipe, folding his hands, and saying:

"Willa Cather. Oh, yes, I remember Willa . . . Did I ever tell you that story?"

He had, but I would hear it again.

"One day she came into my store to buy some baskets. I worked in the Ben Franklin store in Red Cloud (Neb.), and I showed her what we had.

"How much are these?" she asked, holding one of the baskets aloft.

"Ten cents," I replied.

"Ten cents?" she shot back. "That's too much —"

And then they both laughed. In those days, my grandfather said, she was short and stocky, had light grey eyes, rosy skin, and dark brown hair that was brushed back.

He got me hooked, and I began to read her 12 novels in the order that they were written. Willa Cather (1873–1947) was an American novelist and short story writer who celebrated the pioneer traditions of the Nebraska prairies and the deserts of the Southwest.

When the Illusion Theater in Minneapolis announced a few weeks ago that it would be doing nine performances of a new play called "Willa," I had to see it.

And when I learned that two University of Minnesota faculty were involved in the original production, I had to find out more about them.

Toni McNaron, an associate professor of English and a feminist literary critic, told me that she had spent more than 100 hours as a consultant.

Beginning in March, she would meet with the collaborators and would read passages from novels and look at scenes.

"We were looking for themes and threads," she said.

Later the actors would read passages and improvise to see what worked and what didn't.

Another contributor was Mark Savin, an assistant professor.

I found him in the faded yellow barracks behind Lind Hall in a crowded office.

"I was a graduate student at Stanford," he told me, "and I specialized in 19th and 20th century literature. But I had never read any Cather."

So on the way to a job interview at the University of California, San Diego, someone suggested he read "The Professor's House," written in 1925.

"I read it on the plane. It's the right length for a plane ride," explaining that he had flown from San Francisco to Los Angeles and then to San Diego.

When he stopped in Los Angeles he started reading Tom Outland's story, a sort of book-within-a-book.

When he finished her book, he was hooked.

Savin turned down the job offer and instead came to Minnesota in 1974 as a visiting professor.

His interest in Cather has grown, and for the last two Christmases he has been tracking down copies of her letters.

To date he has read more than 900. He also has a copy of her will.

Her letters, he told me, are scattered in a number of collections throughout the country. Some collections were only recently opened, he said, and in others "you may read the letters, but you may not take notes."

Shortly before she died on April 24, 1947, she was living in an apartment in New York City.

"She became obsessive about her privacy," Savin said, "and she would burn her letters."

Suddenly, he got up from his grey swivel chair, walked to a file cabinet and retrieved a photocopy of a 1906 Willa Cather letter from the Harvard collection.

He put his feet up on his cluttered desk, and while weak light came in from the 12-pane window of his barracks office, he read this excerpt:

"I shall never forget the first Christmas I spent in the West. Most of our neighbors were Swedes and Norwegians, and my brothers and I were taken to a Christmas entertainment at the Norwegian church. The Christmas tree was a poor little naked boxelder — you probably don't know that travesty of a tree — all wrapped in green tissue paper, cut in fringes to look like foliage."
