AS A WOMAN
Your education can

- make you the most interesting person you can be
- give you the background for understanding our increasingly complex world
- lay the foundations for an exciting career
- prepare you for community leadership
- help you to combine your own special talents with the demands of marriage
- aid you in planning for further learning even if your four-year college career is interrupted

BUT -- in order to fully realize these possibilities you should start planning NOW. You will want to consider these aims in choosing your course work from the beginning of your college career. Many young women have found answers to these questions on their own. They realize that men and women may have different reasons for seeking an education and different uses for that education. A woman's life usually does not follow the same continuity as does a man's, yet women need the best education possible if they, their husbands, their children and their communities are to be happy and secure.

The University of Minnesota has set up the WOMEN'S CONTINUING EDUCATION PROGRAM to help you plan intelligently for that happiness and security.

The WOMEN'S CONTINUING EDUCATION PROGRAM is designed to help you, as a woman, make the best possible use of university facilities now, and to continue to make full use of your education later. It offers to you as an undergraduate:

-- a counselor, a specialist in considering women's education, with whom you can discuss your plans

-- a special course, Family Life 50: The Educated Woman in the United States, given every spring to a selected group of applicants

-- ways in which to plan your future, not only as a woman, but also as a talented and contributing member of society.
