More Food Facts

(0:30)

Americans ate six percent less meat and five percent less eggs in 1973 as compared to 1972.

But University of Minnesota extension home management specialist Edna Jordahl says we ate four percent more fruit and more canned and frozen fish. We drank a little more milk but used less butter.

She predicts that Americans will increase their red meat consumption in 1974, regaining about half of what was dropped in 1973. Poultry and egg consumption probably will be high, but dairy products will decline. Consumers will continue to seek substitutes and less expensive food items.
