INTRODUCTION

This guide of courses available at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities Campus for study in the field of housing was created in response to the growing interest in housing as a field of study and the recognition that the study of housing is interdisciplinary in nature. The guide is intended to help students and faculty become aware of the wide range of opportunities for graduate study in housing in numerous departments of the University.

This edition of the guide identifies --

1. courses on housing and those relevant to housing from University departments;
2. University faculty or resource persons who are potential instructors, advisors, or graduate committee members for students;
3. a wide variety of resource centers and libraries for housing research both within the University and the larger metropolitan area.

Additions to future editions of the bulletin should be directed to:

DEGREES IN HOUSING: AN INTRODUCTION TO THE GRADUATE HOUSING PROGRAM

While courses are offered in many departments throughout the University, there is only one department in which a degree in housing can be obtained. The Graduate Housing Program, located within the Design Department of the College of Home Economics, provides an interdisciplinary approach to the study of housing. The interaction between people and their housing environment is viewed from many perspectives including esthetic evaluation, human needs, economic resources, and public policy.

The Program offers both a Master of Arts (M.A.) and a Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) degree. Students at either level have the opportunity to create highly individualized programs with the options of using previous academic and professional experience as a base from which to draw. Each program, subject to Department and Graduate School approval, may use the many resources of the whole University and the particular expertise of individual graduate faculty members. Students may combine their study of housing with various aspects of such diverse areas as aging, public policy, urban planning, interior design, sociology, or architecture. It is also possible to use housing as a minor or supporting field, while obtaining a major in another department.

Housing courses offered through the Design Department must be supplemented with courses from other departments for both graduate degrees.

Applicants to the Doctoral Program who have not completed a Master's Degree may not be admitted directly into the Ph.D. Program, but should apply first, for admission to the Master's Program in Design majoring in housing. Ph.D. students, after completion of three quarters' study, are required to submit an official program and may either propose another field as a minor or related fields as supporting areas. There are no foreign language requirements, although familiarity with a foreign language is recommended and may be necessary if a student wishes to pursue research of an international nature that involves field work abroad.

Students pursuing housing study at any graduate level must be admitted to the Graduate School of the University of Minnesota as well as the Design Department. Each student is responsible for meeting graduate school as well as department procedures and requirements. For additional information regarding admission procedures as well as general degree requirements, refer to the Graduate School and the Design Department Bulletins.

An undergraduate program emphasizing the study of family needs and problems in relation to shelter is also offered. Students take major courses in the Design and Family Social Science Departments. The Program offers three options - design, business, and social services - or an opportunity to take a cross-option for a more general housing background. One of the strengths of the housing program is its field experience. Each student is required to spend a minimum of 400 hours (one academic quarter) working in the community to gain practical work experience in housing.

COURSE LISTINGS

The following listing of courses relevant to housing is offered only as a guide to inform students about courses they may wish to consider. Each person is urged to obtain further information about courses and programs of study from bulletins of the colleges, schools, and related departments involved.

Courses are listed under the department in which they are offered. Some courses have no description. Departments should be contacted regarding specific information. To learn the hour and place each course is offered consult the quarterly Class Schedules.

New courses are always being developed and old courses revised or dropped; hence this listing may not be totally complete or accurate.

Course Numbering System

Courses numbered at the 5000-level may be taken by juniors, seniors, adult specials, and graduate students unless otherwise indicated.

Courses numbered at the 8000-level are for graduate school registrants only.

Course symbols

The following symbols are used to explain listed courses:

- # means consent of instructor is required prior to registration.
- + means all courses preceding + must be completed before credit will be granted for any quarter of the sequence.
- § means credit will not be granted if the equivalent course listed after the section mark has been taken for credit.
- Δ means consent of department of school offering the course is required for registration.

Classification System

The courses are classified according to the following system:

-  courses on housing.
-  courses with a section on housing.
- * courses in which a housing focus is possible.
