Alumnus, Atlanta congressman has the eye of Newt

by Lucy Kragness

When John Linder settled in Atlanta in 1969, his goal was simple — to live and practice dentistry someplace warm.

Today, the UMD alumnus is serving his second term as a Republican member of the U.S. House of Representatives. He is also a close friend of Speaker Newt Gingrich, whose district is next to Linder's in the northern Atlanta suburbs.

"Newt and I have been friends for over 20 years — before he was ever elected," Linder said. "He ran for his first seat and lost in 1974, and I won a seat in the Georgia House that year ... we've been friends ever since."

A native of Deer River, Minn., Linder attended UMD from 1960 to 1963 and was originally a pre-med student, working on a speech and theatre degree "for the fun of it." But when he began taking the first of three required quarters of physics, Linder changed his mind about a career in medicine.

"I hated physics, so I dropped it," he said. "In February during a speech pathology class, I spent a weekend with a group of dentists dealing with cleft-palate children. I was fascinated and decided to switch my major from medicine to dentistry."

In order to get into dental school on the Twin Cities campus, Linder still had to take physics. He convinced Professor Tom Chamberlin, academic dean, to let him just take the three finals of physics. "Two weeks later I sat down on a Saturday afternoon and took 17 credits of physics. I grabbed the books, studied and never had to take a lab or sit in class — and earned 17 credits of A," he said.

The next week, Linder took the aptitude tests for dental school and was admitted. "I think Tom helped on that, because it was a very late acceptance," he said.

While at UMD, Linder was president of the interfraternity council and served on the Publications Board. His friends were leaders in student government, and he had a news program on KUMD campus radio station.

He says he enjoyed being a member of Beta Phi Kappa. "We bought the first fraternity house on campus and remodeled it. I was one of the first residents of the house, which was on 19th Avenue East and Second Street," he said.

While Linder has fond memories of UMD, he doesn't exactly miss Duluth. "I was poor, working two jobs, had no car. I had to walk up the hill or catch a ride to school ... in the winter I'd have a headache by the time I got to campus. It was just not a fun thing."

Linder hasn't been back to Duluth in years but regularly visits family in Deer River. Linder's wife, Lynne, is the sister of Audie Sertich, wife of UMD hockey Coach Mike Sertich.

After graduating from the Twin Cities campus in 1967 with a bachelor's degree and a doctorate in dental surgery, Linder served two years in San Antonio, Texas, as a captain in the Air Force. "I discovered that people don't have to live like I was living in northern Minnesota, and we just decided to stay in the South," he said.

Linder moved to Atlanta in 1969 and established a successful private dental practice. His 14-year political career in the Georgia State House began in 1974 when Linder was elected to represent northern DeKalb County.

Meanwhile, in 1977 he founded Linder Financial Corp., which provides financial assistance to small businesses throughout the South. With the business consuming more and more time, Linder sold the dental practice to his associate in 1979 and served as president of Linder Financial until he was elected to U.S. Congress in 1992.

Linder says it's easy to run for Congress — just raise a lot of money. During his first campaign he raised $750,000 and topped $1 million in 1994

we leave here, we need to have a smaller government and more personal freedom," he said. "We're going to cut spending, and get our economic house in order. And if we do not, we will implode just like the Soviet Union did. Our grandchildren — I've got a grandson — can't afford us. We've been voting ourselves wishes above needs and passing the bill onto future generations, and that's immoral."

Thanks to his close ties with Gingrich, Linder sits on the steering committee that determines who sits on the various House committees. "I was also part of the working group that put the Contract with America together," Linder said. "Newt gives me a great number of opportunities to be helpful."

Linder says some of those opportunities come from 9 p.m. to midnight, typical times for Gingrich strategy sessions. The fast pace leaves little free time. He used to play a lot of golf; now his weekends revolve around giving speeches and attending events. Last spring, he took a week-long cruise with his wife, the first time they had more than three days off in a row since 1991.

The Linders, who have two adult children, live in a house three blocks from the Capitol.

While Linder is proud of being a member of the first Republican majority since 1954, he says he has many friends in both parties. "For too long, there's been a line between the Democrat and Republican sides in Washington — there just wasn't a whole lot of communication. Some of the lines between the parties are starting to break down. That's good news."

Plenty to celebrate in coming year

Dear UMD Alumni and Friends,

Let's keep on celebrating!

Next July 26-27, 1996, alumni will celebrate the first 100 years of UMD and Duluth State Teachers College at the All-Class Reunion.

Planning is now underway for the reunion, which will wind up the 100-year celebration activities. And we need your help! If you would like to help plan the reunion — or just want to share your ideas — please take a minute to send back the form at the bottom of page 3.

Mark your calendars now for the reunion. Remember, alumni are the living history of UMD — let's have a reunion they'll be talking about well into the next century.

While it's tough to sum up the last 100 years in 16 pages, we took a stab at it. You'll find inside this issue of Bridge a special section reprinted from Minnesota Monthly magazine commemorating our proud history. The cover photograph of Chancellor Kathryn A. Martin captures her spirit and enthusiasm as she leads us into the next 100 years.

A more detailed look at our past, along with dozens of photographs, will be included in the book, UMD Comes of Age: The First One Hundred Years, which is currently being written by Neil Storch with photographs by Ken Moran. Look for information in the special section on how to reserve your copy for pick up next July at the All-Class Reunion.

The 100-year celebration kicked off last March, when several hundred alumni and friends gathered at UMD for a birthday party. In April, a special reception in honor of the celebration was held in St. Paul at Eastcliff, home of the university president.

In other news, Chancellor Emeritus Lawrence Ianni stepped down July 31 after delivering the commencement address in May. At commencement, Jon Carver Carlson, 1994-95 president of the UMD Alumni Association Board of Directors, presented Dr. Ianni with an Honorary Distinguished Alumni Award, a fitting tribute to his leadership and close association with the alumni community.

At June's annual meeting of the Alumni Association Board of Directors, the gavel was passed to Cindy Nelson, 1995-96 president, with Vicki Beaupre serving as vice president. Cindy and Vicki are also co-chairs for the All-Class Reunion. We also said our goodbyes to outgoing board members Eric Hylden and Lane

Smith, good friends who will undoubtedly continue to be familiar faces at alumni events.

Fall is right around the corner, with Homecoming '95 on Saturday, October 14. The day kicks off with the Homecoming 5K Prediction Fun Run at 9 a.m. The alumni brunch will be from 10:30 a.m. -12:30 p.m. in the Campus Club of Kirby Student Center, followed by the football game against Moorhead State at 1:30 p.m.

Once again, I want to thank the alumni and friends who continue to support Bridge through generous financial contributions. Your donations and kind notes and letters mean a lot.

Alumni and friends who recently sent us tax-deductible contributions include Earl Cook, '50; Kurt Erickson, '81; Robert Haapola, '68 & '81; Glenn Hanson; Teresa Hustings, '91; Wildred Jensen, '53; Rodney Johnson, '49; Daniel Lindskog, '68; R. Scott Schofield, '70; Thomas Tillander, '69; Robert Vessel, '47; and Ruth Wirstrom, '42 & '68. If you would like to make a contribution in support of Bridge, please send the form on page 12 to us in the Alumni Office. Your generosity is appreciated.

Remember to keep bragging about UMD to your friends. Call a former classmate. Attend Homecoming '95. Buy a UMD license plate. Invite potential students to visit campus. And plan on attending the All-Class Reunion next July 26-27.

Enjoy! See you soon.

Hinderks to fellow Twin Cities alums: get involved

Dear Alumni Office,

Thank you for organizing the Twin Cities Bulldogs Alumni Buffet in February at the Radisson Metrodome. I graduated in 1980, and this get-together was the first alumni event that I've participated in. That's a long time — almost 15 years.

The Hockey Buffet, held in

Letter to the Editor conjunction with the infamous Bulldogs vs. Gophers series in Minneapolis, was tremendous! The slate of speakers, including Chancellor Lawrence Ianni, Harry Oden and Ken Foxworth, gave brief, entertaining and yet very meaningful presentations. The food was most appropriate. And, it was so neat to see people that I haven't seen in all these years. Kind of like a class reunion, but with no pretense.

The turnout, though, baffled me. I would estimate that there were no more than about 30 people in attendance — including the speakers. Was it the sub-zero temperatures? That couldn't have been an issue for our hearty graduates who braved two, four or more years in Duluth. The event, perhaps? No way. A Bulldog-Gopher hockey series should surely be a draw.

A knee-jerk reaction might be to suggest that our grads are apathetic. I doubt it. I think it may simply be a matter of breaking ground, getting organized and bringing our alumni together in a more formal sense. And this event was a solid attempt at doing this. I'd like to see us build on this momentum. There can't be a better place to do it than in the Twin Cities. After all, no single place can boast as many UMD graduates as the Twin Cities metropolitan area can.

The purpose of my letter is two-fold: first, to compliment the Alumni Office on a great program and second, to reach out to my fellow alumni to get involved. You can bet the farm that I will.

Peterson uses technology to unite industry, government

by Lucy Kragness

Susan Peterson always seems to find herself on the cutting edge of technology.

For the last year, the UMD graduate has been a consultant managing a consortium of industry, academia, military and city/county governmental units. The consortium has Industry Consortium.

"It's an exciting project on how to store and share computer data involving 16 universities and 17 companies, including the University of Minnesota, University of California and IBM," Peterson said. "It's project planning at the ultimate level."

Working out of San Diego, Peterson faced the daunting challenge of bringing industry, government and higher education together to work on technical solutions to make the United States more competitive.

Facing challenges is nothing new to Peterson, who graduated from UMD in 1967 with a degree in Business Administration. When she joined Eastman Chemical Co., a former Eastman Kodak Corp. division in Kingsport, Tenn., in 1972 as a business methods analyst, she was only the second woman hired on the professional staff. The first one was fired.

Involved in reorganizing the Chemical Purchases Department at Eastman, Peterson was also a full-time student at East Tennessee State University, where she earned an MBA.

When Peterson moved in 1978 to Mead Johnson Co., a Bristol-Myers subsidiary in Evansville, Ind., as a staff industrial engineer, she was the only woman professional staff member working on packaging birth control pills. She also managed the entire industrial engineering effort for the startup of a multi-million dollar plant.

And when she joined the male-dominated DM & IR Railroad in Duluth in 1980 as a senior industrial engineer, she moved over to systems design to head a major installation of computers in the growing MIS field.

Since leaving Duluth in 1984 for California, Peterson has found herself intimately involved in the shake ups in the aerospace and banking industries.

She spent a year in Pico Rivera as a senior business requirements planner in systems design for Northrop Corp., where she integrated computerized, CAD/CAM and manual systems and directed modifications to the production assembly system for the B-2 bomber.

Leaving the unstable aerospace environment, Peterson accepted a position as a group MIS manager on a major project for Bank of America in San Francisco, only to find herself caught in a massive layoff of 5,000 when it was cancelled.

Moving back to San Diego in 1986, she accepted a position as MIS Project Manager for California First Bank, now Union Bank. Peterson's focus was international banking in a Japanese environment, and she literally worked herself out of a job by helping direct the systems merger of two different banks.

For the last five years, Peterson has shared her business expertise with upper class and graduate students as an adjunct faculty member at the University of California-San Diego, Webster University, the University of Phoenix in San Diego and the University of Redlands. With her extensive background, Peterson offers her students practical advice on how to apply skills taught in MIS, project management and business research classes.

"The class projects are often the first time students have done their own project," Peterson said. While teaching sound management practices and discipline, Peterson also shares what it's like if a company reorganizes.

One of Peterson's former students paid her the highest compliment — he offered to share with her current students how valuable her class was to him in the business world.

Lucy Kragness is Alumni Director in the University Relations office.

made a proposal to the U.S. Department of Transportation to provide wireless Internet access to environmental databases for emergency response to hazardous material spills.

On March 7, Peterson shared her expertise at an international conference of the Institute of Industrial Engineers, of which she is a senior member. She presented a paper on "Consortia Partnerships: Linking Industry and Academia."

From 1992-94, Peterson also applied her extensive background in the management information systems (MIS) field as a senior program manager for National Storage

Ianni scholarship announced

Friends of Chancellor Emeritus Lawrence and Mary Ellen Ianni have established an endowed scholarship in honor of their service and dedication to UMD and the Duluth community. The academic scholarship will be awarded to first-year UMD students. This exceptional tribute was announced at a reception for the Iannis on May 4. Chancellor Ianni is seen above addressing the graduating class of spring 1995.

They gave up at the office to pass $100,000 for Oden Scholarship

The goal was to have the Harry Oden Scholarship Fund reach the $100,000 mark by June 30, the end of UMD's fiscal year. By the end of May, the fund was $2,008 short of that goal.

A month-long campaign on the UMD campus, "Change - Give it Up, Make it Happen," captured the imagination of UMD faculty and staff as they watched pocket change push the bottom line from $98,000 to over $100,000.

"Daily progress reports and motivating messages caught my attention," said Dick Ojakangas, UMD geology professor. "It was fun to watch the progress and to help it along by donating and collecting change." The mini-campaign stressed that every contribution makes a difference. And it did.

As a result of Ken Foxworth's Run for Excellence I and II, more than $101,700 has been donated to fund scholarships for students having disabilities and for under-represented minority students at UMD. Contributors included hundreds of generous alumni, friends, and businesses, the Margaret Rivers Fund, the Groves Foundation, and the Buuck Family Foundation.

"This is wonderful news," said Harry Oden, the scholarship's namesake. "I am honored to have this scholarship named for me, and I am committed to raising funds for the scholarship so that more students can receive the help they need."

Recipients of the 1995 Harry Oden Scholarship will be named in September. To be eligible, students must have completed at least one year of study at UMD, demonstrate financial need, and have a grade point average of at least 2.5.

Corporate Partners reorganize, plan fall business breakfast series

In April, the UMD Corporate Partners Advisory Committee reorganized and met to discuss ways to:

- inform the business community about UMD programs and services;
- recognize and strengthen mutually beneficial business and corporate partnerships, and
- identify strategies that will increase the business community's financial support of UMD.

Mark Phillips, '73, of Minnesota Power, is the chair of the advisory committee, which also includes Martha Alworth, community member; Ruth Ann Eaton, Made in the Shade; Phil France, The Canal Co.; Joe Jeanette, Cartier Agency; and Donn Larson, Westmoreland, Larson & Webster.

"I'm convinced that if the business community knows more about the tremendous economic impact UMD has on the city and the region, business people will understand the need to strengthen their partnerships with the university and to keep UMD strong," Phillips said. "Our committee is enthusiastic about working with Chancellor Martin and assisting in any way we can to help meet her goals."

This fall, UMD Corporate Partners will sponsor "UMD Today," a series of breakfast programs designed to strengthen communication between the business community and the university. Events will be from 7:30-9 a.m. for the following programs: "UMD Center for Economic Development," Wednesday, Sept. 27 at the Holiday Inn; Chancellor Kathryn A. Martin's address to the Chamber of Commerce, Thursday, Oct. 19; and "The UMD Medical School," Wednesday, Nov. 14.

Mark your calendars, or for more information, contact Sue Knill, University Relations, at (218) 726-7111.

University of Minnesota President Nils Hasselmo expresses his appreciation for the work of Sandra Featherman at a farewell reception this summer. Featherman resigned as vice chancellor for academic administration at UMD to become president of the University of New England.

Featherman Prize established

The Featherman Prize has been established on the UMD campus to recognize and honor students who have helped accomplish greater understanding between diverse groups.

The prize, established by Sandra Featherman and her husband, Bernard, will be awarded for the first time in spring 1996. The prize will eventually be funded by an endowment.

An awards committee will include directors of the UMD Achievement Center and the American Indian Learning Resource Center; one minority group advisor (rotating each year); president of the student association; and a student activities advisor at Kirby Student Center.

The prize will be $250 for each student until the endowment principal reaches $10,000, after which time it will be $500.

Name a scholarship for $10,000

You can name a scholarship at UMD in perpetuity with a gift of $10,000, either in your name or in the name of a loved one.

An endowed scholarship can be funded over one or two years and can be designated to academic scholarships, a specific collegiate unit or to students in need of financial assistance. In some cases, donors prefer remembering UMD by including a scholarship gift in their will.

Johnson leads world-class lakes institute at UMD

This article was reprinted from the Wednesday, June 14, 1995, Duluth News-Tribune. Used by permission.

By Noam Levey
Duluth News-Tribune

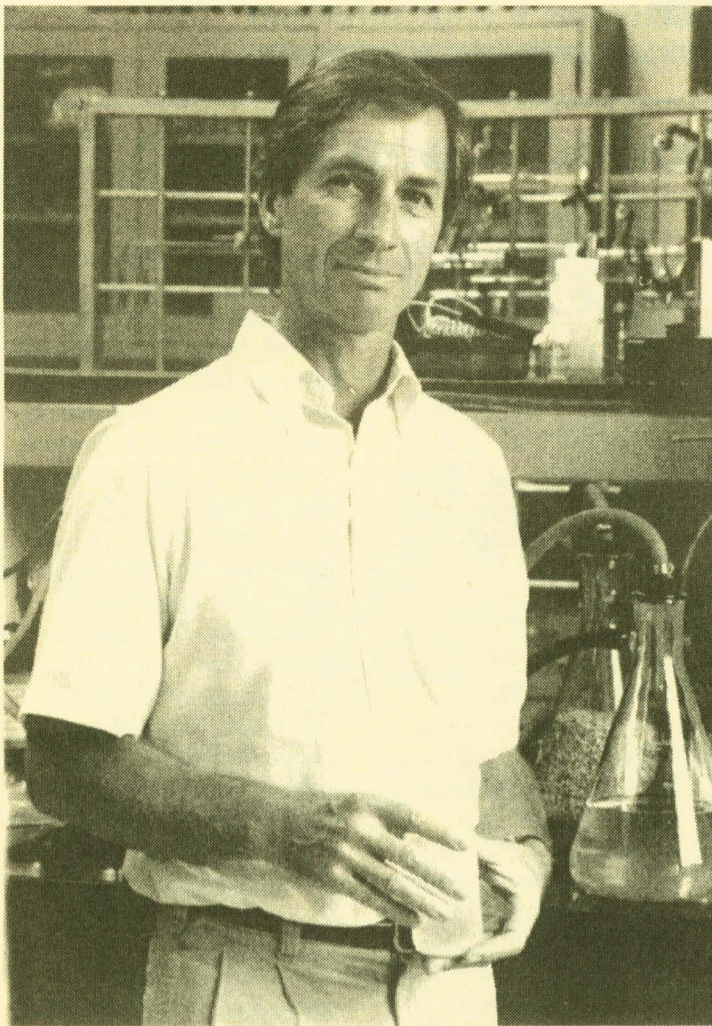

Lake Superior may be the Northland's most treasured asset, but it may also be its most misunderstood.

Though it dominates the region, the lake long has been neglected by scientists, according to lake researcher Tom Johnson.

Johnson is director of UMD's new Large Lakes Observatory, an ambitious center created by the University of Minnesota last year to study the largest bodies of fresh water in the world.

Over the next five years, UMD and the University of Minnesota's Twin Cities campus will commit more than $350,000 annually to run the center, at UMD's old campus on Fifth Street, and hire world-class lake researchers.

In the past, most research has focused on the lakes's biology, but the observatory will investigate the chemistry, geology and physics of Lake Superior and other large lakes.

Tom Johnson was lured away from Duke University to lead the Large Lakes Observatory, an institute based at UMD that will research Lake Superior and the world's other large lakes.

Johnson said researchers will undertake projects such as mapping the lake floors, looking at water circulation, monitoring chemicals in the lake and researching the geologic history of the lake.

Johnson is the only researcher at the center so far, but over the next five years the university plans to hire six additional researchers and take on graduate students and post-doctoral students.

Historically, large lakes have been overlooked by researchers who gravitated to the more glamorous field of ocean research, Johnson said. Even among the Great Lakes, Superior has been a poor cousin.

"We tend to think Superior is a healthy lake, so we don't worry about it," Johnson said, noting that there are more complete sediment records of Lake Victoria in Africa than there are for Lake Superior.

Lake research centers exist in Wisconsin, Michigan and Ontario, but they have traditionally focused on the other Great Lakes, and centers on Lake Superior, such as the Lake Superior Research Center at the University of Wisconsin-Superior and the Environmental Protection Agency's freshwater lab, have focused on the lake's biology.

Organizers of the Large Lakes Observatory hope the new center will bring a comprehensive focus to the lake.

The observatory will not be cheap. At a time when the university system is struggling with tight budgets, funding for the center represents a significant commitment, but organizers insist the center is worth the investment.

The center has working relationships with research centers at the largest lakes in the world.

Johnson recently returned from a multinational expedition to research the largest lakes in East Africa that included a comprehensive mapping of the bottom of Lake Victoria, the first such effort the British Admiralty did since a survey in 1905.

Johnson was lured away from Duke University, and next year scientists from Great Britain and Michigan will join the observatory. Erik Brown of Michigan will come to the center next year from the National Center for Scientific Research in Paris.

"It is very exciting," said UMD chemistry Professor Bob Carlson, who helped create the center as UMD's vice chancellor in the 1980s. "This is going to be a world-class program."

University for Seniors helps build intergenerational bridge

The perceived "generation gap" between college students and their elders is a familiar theme: students who are idealistic and passionate about their chosen fields of study may have little exposure to the realities of the work-place, its challenges, frustrations and rewards.

At the same time, those who have the benefits of many year's experience may find it difficult to relate to the changed cultural and academic environment of today's young people.

A committee of University for Seniors (US) members has taken a direct approach to overcoming these differences through mentorships, information sharing sessions and joint classes with UMD students.

"Our society does not provide much in the way of intergenerational exchange," says Gertrude Jacobson, chair of the US committee for Intergenerational Learning. "We feel that it is important to bridge this gap in whatever ways we can here at UMD."

The committee got off to a successful start last year developing a program unique to UMD that complements the faculty/student relationship. College of Education and Human Service Professions (CEHSP) students were paired with retired teacher mentors, psychology students participated in a multi-generational discussion group on motherhood, and the Investment Club heard a presentation by US members entitled "Investing from the Investors' Point of View."

CEHSP Dean Mitzi Doane said the mentoring program "gives the students access to wisdom unattainable in any other way. Our students need the knowledge" of experienced professionals. Student John Madden said of his mentor, "we had the best time. He was an inspiration and a reassurance to me."

The committee plans to continue the education mentorships and to develop other opportunities for exchange this year. US members and students will work together to create a user-friendly guide to the library's computer system and develop an evaluation tool for the program. Students may also be invited to attend some US classes.

"We will understand more about the problems and challenges facing today's students and they will benefit from our experience and knowledge. Building this bridge is hard work, but certainly worth the effort," said Jacobson.

US members can also benefit from connecting with younger students on the campus they share, as Pat Liljeblad found. "I need to absorb all the vitality I can get," she said.

The seventh year of University for Seniors begins this fall with the opening Convocation scheduled for 9:30, Saturday, September 16 in Montague Hall 70 at UMD.

Melvin George, vice-president for institutional relations of the University of Minnesota, will present the keynote, "The Joy of Learning."

US offers a host of learning opportunities to those age 50 and older who are looking for intellectual and cultural stimulation in an academic environment. An institute for learning in retirement, University for Seniors is an educational cooperative in which the members plan and arrange study groups, lectures, workshops, field trips, and cultural and social events.

Fall study groups include: Astronomy, Current Issues, The Great Lakes, Crime and Punishment (not the book), Shakespeare's Hamlet, Literary Journalism, and Philosophy from Aristotle to Zen.

Monday afternoon lectures will feature "The Gardens of Versailles" with Professor Thomas F. Hedin, "The Art and Skill of Listening" with Professor Virginia Katz, and the "Hinckley Fire of 1894" with author and historian Grace Swenson Bergan.

Also offered this fall are a special interest group on investing and special events which include dinners and plays on the UMD campus, field trips to Crex meadows in northwestern Wisconsin and Duluth's Hawk Ridge to view migrating waterfowl, and visits to various business sites such as Cirrus Aviation in Duluth.

Magnuson named acting vice chancellor

Vincent R. Magnuson, professor and assistant head of chemistry, has been appointed acting vice chancellor for academic administration at the University of Minnesota, Duluth (UMD), effective Aug. 1.

Vincent Magnuson

An active member of the American Chemical Society, Magnuson has also published widely in his area of research. He has served on numerous university planning committees and chaired the Campus Assembly Executive Committee.

Magnuson, who has been at UMD since 1968, co-chaired the Transition Committee for Chancellor-designate Kathryn A. Martin, who assumed her duties Aug. 1.

Magnuson replaces Sandra Featherman, who resigned this summer to become president of the University of New England. He will serve while a national search is conducted for a permanent successor to Featherman.

UMD graduates 650 in May

More than 1,000 students earned diplomas this spring and more than 650 took part in the ninety-third Commencement of UMD on May 20 at the Duluth Entertainment Convention Center.

Speaker was Lawrence Ianni, who headed UMD from 1987 until July 31 this year. He will return to UMD to teach English during the 1995-96 school year.

Student speaker was Peter Markham of New Brighton, Minn., who graduated from the College of Education and Human Service Professions.

Jon Carver Carlson, outgoing president of the UMD Alumni Association, presented Ianni with an Honorary Distinguished Alumni Award, making Ianni an honorary Bulldog for life.

Ianni also presented Distinguished service awards to Robert J. Falk, associate professor emeritus of psychology and mental health; Ken Moran, principal photographer at UMD for more than 30 years; Minnesota Sen. Jerry Janezich of Chisholm; and Minnesota Rep. Tom Rukavina of Virginia.

Others recognized at Commencement included Robert Powless, professor and head of American Indian Studies for the Jean G. Blehart Distinguished Teaching Award; Helen Rallis, associate professor of education, the Horace T. Featherman leaves for University of New England

Sandra Featherman, the second-ranking administrator at UMD, was appointed president of the University of New England (UNE), UNE's board of trustees announced on May 3.

Featherman, vice chancellor for academic administration at UMD, came to Minnesota in 1991 from Temple University in Philadelphia, where she was assistant to the president, president of the Faculty Senate, director of the Center for Public Policy, and director of the Master of Public Administration Program.

UMD Chancellor Emeritus Lawrence A. Ianni said he accepted Featherman's resignation with regret. "Sandra has been a genuine asset to UMD. However, she is well qualified to be a university chief executive and I am not surprised by her advancement. I have absolute confidence that she is going to be a smashing success and I wish her the very best."

Featherman said she was most proud of her achievements in the area of long-range planning at UMD, specifically with regard to crafting UMD's "Vision 2000" plan; promoting more inclusion and diversity among students, faculty, and staff; and helping further strengthen UMD's academic programs.

"While I am very excited about the new challenges ahead, there are so many wonderful aspects of UMD which I will deeply miss," she said. "People have been wonderful to work with. Part of my heart will always remain at UMD."

Featherman became known in Minnesota as a political commentator for Minnesota Public Radio and for leadership in organizations for women in higher education. She also contributed a regular column on politics to the Duluth News-Tribune.

Featherman holds a Ph.D. in urban and regional planning from the University of Pennsylvania. She is a well-published scholar with more than 40 journal articles, book chapters and monographs and 22 scholarly papers to her credit.

New CLA dean finds a home in the humanities

by Doris Pride

Harry Hellenbrand was a Brooklyn boy from a family of lawyers whose natural destiny would have been the law. Instead, he fell in love with the humanities and social sciences, and today he is dean of UMD's College of Liberal Arts.

"My family still hasn't forgiven me for abandoning the law," says the Harvard graduate and family rebel who came to UMD from Cal. State San Bernardino last year.

In an era of booming technical and vocational schools, Hellenbrand often finds himself defending the liberal arts. "The liberal arts curriculum will not prepare a person for a 'job' — but for the 'jobs' they'll have in life," says Hellenbrand.

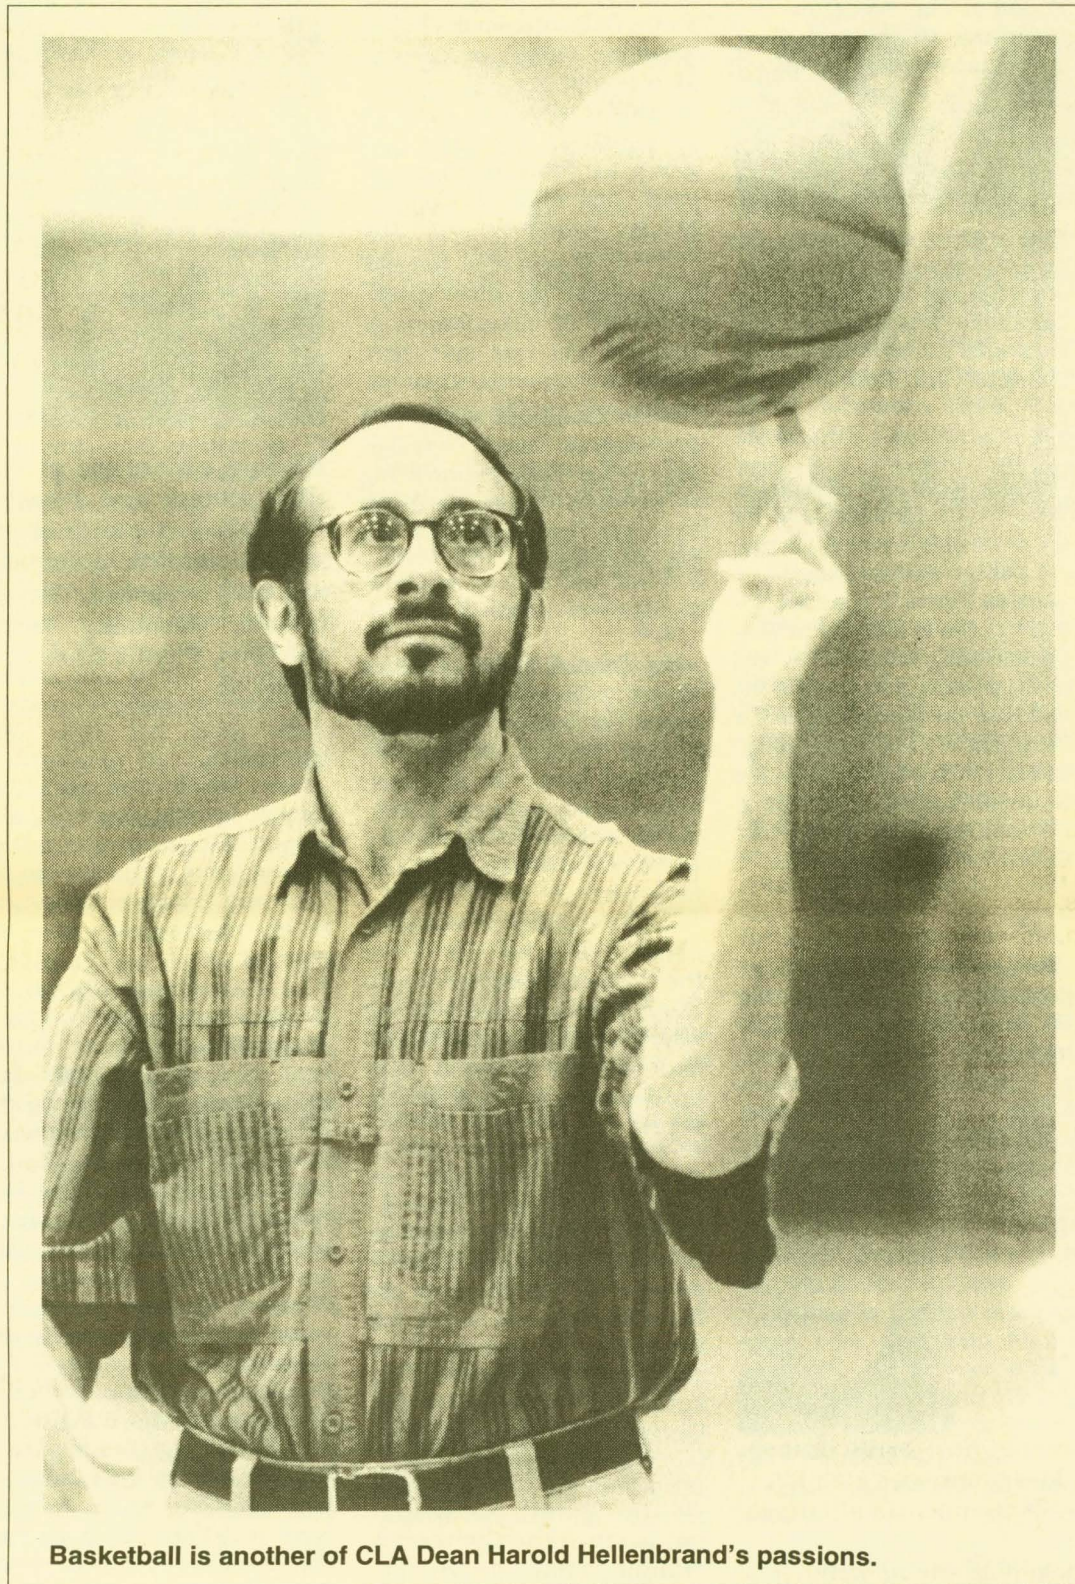

"Vocational training alone is fine if you want to retire at 22," he adds. "But it takes more to cultivate good citizens and prepare them for a society that demands we know how to communicate and think independently."

There's a misperception about what the liberal arts can deliver, Hellenbrand says. "Some think liberal arts is an 'antiquated curriculum,' but in reality it's the one that can affect your career the most over the next 10-20 years — in the ability to ingest and communicate information," he says.

He likes to pose the question, "What are the set of intellectual skills I can acquire that will be most useful to me over the next 20 years?"

For most of us today, he says, the answer lies in mastering the following skills: 1) Becoming a critical consumer of information, 2) Speaking and writing well, 3) Understanding diverse cultures, and 4) Handling data.

"I don't mean handling software per se. But take an entrepreneur, for example, who needs to know how to read a budget as well as to work with people both socially and psychologically," he says. These are critical skills without which people will sink in the job market.

"We're in an information age. As an analogy: 300 years ago we had to tame nature, inhabiting a roughly hewn world; today, more of us will be clearing the way through an 'information wilderness' — we have no options.

"I have an uncle — a lawyer — who was vice president at a Fortune 500 company. When I go to New York, he loves to talk to me about the graduates coming into the company, and you know what he says? His company will "train" incoming graduates in current technology, but it's expected they'll already have excellent skills of the kind we're discussing here. These are skills that can't be learned on the job."

"And while we're talking about corporate executives, let's just look at their degrees. You'll find they have a broad array of disciplines — many of those in the liberal arts, ranging from philosophy to composition."

Hellenbrand says both his parents were involved in politics — his mother as a state legislator and his father as a judge in the New York City Supreme Court. And for a while, even Hellenbrand worked for New York Gov. Hugh Carey, thinking his future might lie in politics.

But he couldn't overcome his passion for the humanities and social sciences. At Harvard, he fell in love with reading literature and architectural articles. With a degree in English and a fine arts minor, he went on to Stanford, where he continued his passion, earning graduate degrees in interdisciplinary studies.

It's that kind of experience Hellenbrand wants for all students. "My guiding philosophy is to provide students with an intellectual oasis — a time in life when they can read, learn, and talk about the best ideas people have ever had — and learn to think for themselves."

But the practical application of the liberal arts is equally important, Hellenbrand says. At UMD, new majors in American Indian studies and environmental studies are already helping to meet the needs of the region.

"I also want to sharpen the focus in some of the places where we traditionally have had excellence, such as political science, philosophy and communication. In history and geography, we'll be doing some program rebuilding due to retirements and departures," says Hellenbrand.

In addition, he wants to sharpen student services including advising, recruitment, and alumni relations. "These areas are all-important," says Hellenbrand.

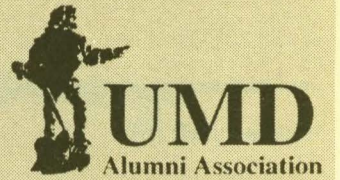

He also advises students to get a good background in language and culture, especially if they are interested in travel and mobility.

"As the world gets smaller, we're more and more economically dependent on other nations. Europeans and Asians have understood this for a long time."

Other advice? "Clarify your strengths on your resume and look for internships and related work experience while still in school."

Doris Pride is director of public relations in UMD's Office of University Relations.

UMD DEVELOPMENT OFFICE ANNUAL REPORT AND HONOR ROLL OF CONTRIBUTORS

The University of Minnesota Duluth proudly presents the 1994-95 Annual Report and Honor Roll of Contributors to publicly thank donors who made gifts of cash, stock, personal and real property, or equipment to UMD from July 1, 1994 to June 30, 1995.

Generous contributions from alumni, friends, corporations, associations, and foundations help UMD bridge the gap between available resources and the cost of encouraging the quest for excellence. Each gift makes an important difference for UMD students and each gift is sincerely appreciated.

The stories and photographs of UMD scholarship recipients throughout these pages illustrate the continuing need for scholarships to assist qualified, motivated students. With your help, these students will complete their academic programs at UMD and be on their way to actualizing their dreams.

This year, UMD celebrates 100 years of education and service and begins a new century with a sense of anticipation and vigor. Dr. Kathryn A. Martin, who became UMD's eighth chancellor on August 1, 1995, is committed to honoring UMD's heritage and continuing to forge strong partnerships for the twenty-first century. The new Campus Center and the Village Apartments are ready to serve the UMD community. The excitement of change fills the campus.

The UMD Office of Development strives to accurately list all donors. If your name is omitted or in error, or if a joint contribution incorrectly lists only one name, please contact the Office of Development, 315 Darland Administration Building, 10 University Drive, Duluth, Minnesota 55812-2496 or call (218) 726-7989.

Thank you for supporting the University of Minnesota, Duluth.

Lakehead Pipe Line: Three Decades of Scholarships

At a special recognition ceremony in June, Hugh Sangster, President of Lakehead Pipe Line Company, Inc., received a plaque honoring Lakehead as a member of the UMD Trustees Society. Former Chancellor Lawrence Ianni presented the plaque. Nick Whelihan, '62 UMD alumnus and director of financial aid, and Brenda Herzig, assistant director of financial aid, were on hand in addition to other guests to say "thank you" to Sangster for his company's significant assistance to students. Pictured are (from left) Whelihan, Ianni; Sangster, and Herzig. Lakehead has been in partnership with UMD for 30 years and puts scholarship dollars to work for UMD students who demonstrate financial need. Lakehead's corporate philosophy of being a good citizen of the communities in which they do business offers inspiration to others.

Swenson Scholarships Assist UMD Chemistry, Biochemistry Students

James and Susan Swenson have established two scholarships at UMD; one is an academic scholarship based on financial need to assist outstanding chemistry and biochemistry students and the second is to fund exceptional chemistry students in summer research projects. The Swensons are seated and surrounded by seven of the first 15 students who have received scholarships. From left are Rebecca Tyberg, Tricia Tomlinson++, Sarah Genosky*, Timothy Vedder*, Steven Berry++, Wade Kubat+ and Richard Powell++. This fall, six high-ability freshmen will be added to the academic program, bringing the total to 21 students in two years. The academic scholarships are renewable through the fifth year of undergraduate study. Jim is a 1959 UMD chemistry alumnus.*

Glensheen Auction

As a first-year event, the auction at Glensheen attracted hundreds of guests and generated more than $25,000, which will benefit preservation activities at the former Congdon estate. Over 200 private gifts of antiques, collectibles, and business goods and services formed a successful foundation for the future of this event. Guests enjoyed an elegant garden buffet and toured the main house, which is home to hundreds of fine art pieces collected by Chester and Clara Congdon as they traveled the world at the turn of the century. Replacement of Glensheen's aging roof is a major focus at this time. More than 85,000 visitors toured Glensheen in 1994.

ALUMNI DONORS BY CLASS YEAR

UMD's alumni are graduates of the same outstanding institution, whether they attended when the campus was the Duluth State Normal School (1905-1921), the Duluth State Teachers College (1921-1947), The University of Minnesota, Duluth Branch (1947-1959), or the University of Minnesota, Duluth (1959-present).

Over the decades, generous financial support by alumni and other friends has provided high-quality educational opportunities for thousands of students. Acknowledging what a college education at UMD has meant in their lives, these alumni are returning the favor through their own annual gifts to their alma mater, helping today's students prepare for tomorrow's challenges. 🍀

KUMD Offers Students, Community Something Different

Margie Preuss is director of the Colder in Your Ear live comedy radio shows, one of the many locally produced programs featured on KUMD, 103.3 FM. The station continues to offer students an opportunity to do radio, as it has from its founding in 1956. But with 95,000 watts of power, it also serves the larger Northland community. Station Manager Paul Schmitz says KUMD's audience increased 63 percent last year and the station raised more than $93,000 from listeners and underwriters. "The station is growing faster than ever now as it brings many of the resources of UMD to an ever-expanding audience," Schmitz says.
