University of Minnesota Crookston

Leadership Letter

From the Vice Chancellor

As I pass my one-year anniversary at UMN Crookston, I have taken some time to reconnect with several of my mentors and a number of my prior work colleagues. When they ask me about what stands out the most about this place, the answer is simple—it's the people. And after one year, there are also times when I wonder if we all realize how significant it is that our institution is defined by its people. Granted, we made a name for ourselves by being the first "laptop university," but if the lessons of technology, the Internet revolution, and the emergence of artificial intelligence have taught us anything, I hope that it is the importance of focusing on the human dimensions of education. Consider this: In its 2018 Future of Jobs Report, the World Economic Forum (WEF) noted that nearly 50% of companies expect automation and robotics to lead to workforce cuts in the next five years; however, new job creation is expected to outpace job retrenchment. For the jobs that companies retain, WEF expects job skill stability to decline, meaning that more workers will need to enhance their current skills in order to retain and perform their jobs. Among the skills that the report identified as increasing in importance in the coming five years for new jobs and for evolving jobs are critical thinking, creativity, emotional intelligence, flexibility, leadership, and social influence.

Among those the report identified as decreasing in importance were memory, manual dexterity, and technology use. These trends reinforce the value of higher education, but they will also push those of us at colleges and universities to focus less attention on memorization and content mastery and greater attention to higher order human skills and habits of the mind. In other words, these trends should position UMN Crookston to be a leader in our industry.

Last Friday, I met with the instructors for the new first-year seminar course. During the meeting, Dr. Baird observed that while we are trying to cover a lot of content in the course, it's essential that we not miss out on providing our students with a "breakfast club" experience. For those of you who are not familiar with the 1980s film, The Breakfast Club, the movie is about a diverse group of high school students from very different walks of life gathering in a school library for an all-day detention. The students are asked to write an essay addressing who they think they are. During the course of their day together, the students begin to reveal secrets and fears with one another, and as they disclose more deeply, they come to appreciate each other's differences while also learning that they have a number of things in common. As we roll out the first-year seminar courses and align them to our new Student Success Center, our greatest opportunity will be to build a sense of belonging among our diverse student body by attending to who our students are as people and as members of our community.

Not every course at UMN Crookston lends itself to teaching life or providing a breakfast club experience, but every course that we offer can extend beyond content dissemination to teaching human skills related to critical thinking, communication, creativity, flexibility, and emotional intelligence. And whether it be in 5 years or 50, what our alumni will come home to share is not the content they learned. What they will talk about is how the people at UMN Crookston invested in them as people, cared for them, helped them discover something unique inside, and taught them something special about life. Just as important, those things will not only set the UMN Crookston experience apart for our students, it will help to set UMN Crookston students apart within the workforce, in their families, and in their communities.

Point of Pride

The University of Minnesota Crookston ranks at the top of the latest rankings from U.S. News released in early September. In the category "Midwest Top Public Regional Colleges for 2020," the U of M Crookston ranked in the number one spot. The campus has ranked in the top four consecutively for 23 years.

Campus Mail

In order to have your mail delivered correctly, it is important to address letters and packages properly.

Follow these guidelines to ensure your packages and letters find you:

First name Last name
Student PO Box (or Department Name)
2900 University Avenue
Crookston, Minnesota

If you have packages you are expecting but have not received, check with the Campus Post Office in 127 Sargeant Student Center.

Pay Date Moved

First 2020 Pay Date Moved From January 1 to January 2

The first scheduled pay date of 2020 is Wednesday, January 1. However, New Year's Day is a bank holiday, which means pay cannot be delivered on that day. In order for employees to receive their pay in the same tax year as it is accounted for, the University will move this pay date to the following business day, Thursday, January 2. Normally, pay dates are moved one day earlier if they fall on a bank holiday, except when the change affects taxes.

Highlights

From the Alumni Office

Celebrate our exceptional alumni at the Alumni Awards Celebration on Friday, September 27 to honor our Athletic Hall of Fame inductees, Outstanding Alumni, and Young Alumni Award, the Abbey.
