SUMMER TERM
ENROLLMENT AT 'U'
OFFICIALLY 9,202

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Enrollment for the first summer session at the University of Minnesota officially totals 9,202 including 3,688 veterans of World War II, True E. Pettengill, University recorder, announced Monday (July 2).

This total is 1,106 below the official registration figure of 10,308 for the first summer session of 1950. The loss in enrollment is accounted for in large measure, Pettengill pointed out, by a drop of 819 in the number of veterans who signed up for classes this term. A year ago, the veteran enrollment figure was 4,507.

Men outnumber women 6,407 to 2,795 at the first summer session, the recorder reported, while last year, the ratio of men to women students was 7,325 to 2,983.

Duluth Branch enrollment, included in the total figures, is 584. Of this number, 326 are men and 258 are women students. Veterans enrolled at Duluth number 180. Enrollment at the branch last year totalled 736 including 446 men and 290 women, while the veteran registration was 288.

Official registration figures at the University are recorded as of the close of the second week of the term.

The first summer session opened June 20 and will close July 28. Classes for the second session will begin July 31 and will end September 1.

The Shapiro lecture will be followed Tuesday, July 10, with a symposium on "Contemporary Directions" -- current trends in the American arts -- from 3-5 p.m. and from 8-10 p.m. in the Minnesota Museum of Natural History.

Andrew Carnduff Ritchie, director of painting and sculpture, Museum of Modern Art, and H. Harvard Arnason, acting director of the Walker Art Center and head of the University's art department, will speak for art; concert violinist Stephan Hero and Paul Oberg, chairman of University's music department, for music; and Shapiro and William Van O'Connor, associate English professor, for literature.

"Five Movements in Modern Painting" will be discussed by Ritchie in a lecture at 3 p.m. Wednesday, July 11, also in the museum. Ritchie, who helped recover the German art loot in Austria after World War II, is past director of the Albright Art gallery, Buffalo, N. Y.

During July and August, the University gallery in Northrop auditorium will have an exhibit of "Forty American Painters, 1940-50". A catalogue, in which each artist tells of his development, supplements the show of 80 paintings.

Climaxing the "Contemporary Directions" programs will be the appearance of Stephan Hero as violin soloist with the summer session orchestra in Northrop auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Thursday, July 12. James Aliferis, associate music professor, will conduct the orchestra, made up of Minneapolis Symphony orchestra members.

Violinist Stephen Huro and the University of Minnesota summer session orchestra will present the first American orchestral performance of Alexandre Tanman's "Cinq Pieces" in Northrop Memorial auditorium Thursday evening (July 12). The concert, starting at 8:30 p.m., will be free to the public.

Scores for the Tanman work have been copied for this performance from the original manuscript, airmailed to Huro from the composer's home in Paris. Huro's search for the orchestration -- never published in this country -- began in New York, went on a wild goose chase to Hollywood, where Tanman was supposedly living, before the composer's right address was found.

Huro has played "Cinq Pieces" on several previous occasions, but only with piano accompaniment. With the University's summer session orchestra under direction of associate music professor James Aliferis, Huro will also perform Ernest Chausson's Poeme, Op. 25.

The orchestra, made up of Minneapolis Symphony orchestra members, will play three numbers: Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, Paul Creston's Two Choric Dances, Op. 179 and selections from George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess".

Born in New York city, Huro studied with French violinist Jacques Thibaud in Paris and then returned to become a pupil of Louis Persinger. He has appeared as guest soloist with more than 30 orchestral groups including the New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia orchestra, Chicago orchestra, Rochester Philharmonic and the Baltimore Symphony.

During the war, the violinist entertained the Armed Forces for over 25 months, playing almost 800 performances in the U.S. and the Pacific theater.

Music for the concert is provided by the cooperation of Local 73 of the American Federation of Musicians, through a grant from the Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industry.

'U' RESEARCHERS
TACKLE KNOTTY
PROBLEMS DAILY

M. E. P. only

(FOR RELEASE THURSDAY, JULY 12)

Minneapolis ---How can Minnesota farmers capitalize on left-over flax straw? Is it possible to transport flour by air pressure instead of conveyor belts? How can iron be refined most profitably from taconite?

Knotty problems such as these are tackled every day by University of Minnesota researchers in the institute of technology. Their work -- covering hundreds of different questions -- is often financed by private industries and government agencies.

Ten years ago, Ralph E. Montonna, now director of the engineering experiment station, initiated the Minnesota flax project. His attempts to salvage the thousands of tons of flax straw burned in this state each year may lead to a new Minnesota industry -- linen production.

Agricultural engineers are working to get the flax in proper condition for chemical processing, chemists are devising methods for chemical treatment of the fibers and textile researchers are busy checking physical characteristics of the Minnesota linen fabric.

Using air to transfer flour -- rather than the traditional conveyor belt -- is a new milling technique now under development at the University. It has been found that under certain conditions flour behaves much like water and can be pumped through pipes. If a way can be worked out to handle "fluidized" flour efficiently, American millers may adopt the invention.

In the mines experiment station, scientists have been concentrating on the processing of taconite -- iron-bearing rock in the Mesabi range that may eventually solve the problem of America's rapidly-diminishing iron ore supply.

E. W. Davis, director of the station, and his staff have helped two mining companies set up pilot plants, and last year installed a blast furnace at the University to refine taconite. "One main problem," explains Davis, "is that taconite contains only about 30 per cent iron while our present iron and steel industries are all geared to smelt ore that's 50 per cent iron."

Ways of sealing and pressurizing buildings to prevent infiltration of gas, germs or radioactive dust, in case of an atomic attack, are part of a study University engineers are doing for the U.S. Naval Research laboratory. Another project at the engineering experiment station -- a study of air and vapor transmission through windows -- is being sponsored by the Weatherstrip Research institute.

The machine design department, headed by Professor James J. Ryan, has devised many instruments for the army and navy, including a "flying laboratory" to test accuracy of aircraft gunsights and a tensiometer to measure the shock of a parachute opening. A device to measure the diameter and elasticity of the human aorta, for early detection of arteriosclerosis -- hardening of the arteries, has been designed in cooperation with the University's physiological research center.

Personal experiences of professors sometimes lead to the invention of useful gadgets. Ryan once underwent an operation that required him to be weighed every day following surgery. "The process was so uncomfortable that I decided I would make a scale that would weigh patients without removing them from bed," he said.

With the help of his machine design crew and Dr. Grafton Smith, Ryan had a scale ready for use five months later. It slides under the bed, weighing bed, patient and bedding -- but compensating for the extra weight so only the weight of the patient registers on the dial.

Two University of Minnesota teaching assistants — John W. Ward, 1413 11th Ave. S., Minneapolis, and Arnold Nelson, Stillwater — have been awarded fellowships by the American Council of Learned Societies for advanced research in American Studies during the 1951-52 academic year.

Ward will use his $3,450 grant to study the varying conceptions of Andrew Jackson recorded in history, literature and popular culture. Nelson, who was awarded $3,780, will study social class relationships in American fiction to 1850.

During the last five years, six fellowships — averaging $3,000 per year — have been awarded by educational foundations to students in the University's American Studies program. "This generous support," says Professor Tremaine McDowell, program chairman, "is indicative of the respect which the education world now accords interdepartmental research in general and American Studies in particular."

Ward holds the bachelor of arts degree from Harvard, Nelson from Hamline. Both received their master of arts degrees at the University.

'U' REGENTS NAME
MC DIARMID DEAN OF ARTS COLLEGE

Minneapolis --- Errett Weir McDiarmid, University of Minnesota librarian since 1943, was named dean of the University's college of science, literature and the arts Friday (July 6) by the Board of Regents.

He will succeed T. Raymond McConnell who resigned the deanship in 1950 to become chancellor of the University of Buffalo, New York. Since Dean McConnell's departure, J. W. Buchta, assistant dean of the college and chairman of the physics department, has served as acting dean. Buchta will retain the post of assistant dean.

Dean McDiarmid was born in Beckley, West Virginia, July 13, 1909. He was graduated from Central high school, Fort Worth, Texas, in 1925 and received a bachelor of arts degree in 1929 and a master of arts degree in 1930 from Texas Christain university, Fort Worth.

After earning a bachelor of arts degree from the library school of Emory university in Georgia in 1931, he went on to take advanced library training in the graduate library school at the University of Illinois where he received the doctor of philosophy degree in 1934.

Librarian of Baylor university, Waco, Texas, from 1934 to 1937, McDiarmid joined the staff of the library school at the University of Illinois in 1937, becoming assistant director of the school in 1942. The following year he was called to Minnesota to succeed Frank K. Walter as University librarian and director of the University's division of library instruction upon Walter's retirement.

Dean McDiarmid has published many articles in the library field and is the author of "The Library Survey", 1940, a publication of the American Library association, and co-author of "The Administration of the American Public Library" issued by the association and the University of Illinois Press. He has also served as managing editor of College and Research Libraries, the journal of the Association of College and Research Librarians.

He served as president of the American Library association from June 1948 to June 1949, and is now vice president and president-elect of the Minnesota Library association.

Married and the father of three daughters, Dean McDiarmid lives at 2077 Commonwealth avenue, St. Paul.

"There is no more challenging opportunity, no post with a higher potential in the University of Minnesota," President J. L. Morrill commented Friday, "than the deanship of our college of science, literature and the arts. It is my confident belief, shared unanimously by the faculty committee which counselled me in the choice, that Dr. McDiarmid will bring high scholarly integrity and stimulating leadership to his new assignment.

"Dr. J. W. Buchta, generously assuming the heavy burden of the acting deanship during the last year, deserves our grateful appreciation," asserted the University president. "From the outset, he requested that he be eliminated from consideration for the deanship which he, too, could have undertaken with every evidence of success. I am glad that Dean McDiarmid has prevailed upon Dr. Buchta to continue in the important position of assistant dean of the college."

The committee which advised President Morrill in the selection of a new dean consisted of Dean T. C. Blegen of the graduate school, chairman; Professor William Anderson of the department of political science; Professor Dwight L. Minnich, chairman of the department of zoology; Professor Samuel Monk of the English department; and Professor John C. Weaver of the geography department.

Named by the Regents as acting librarian and acting director of the division of library instruction was Edward Barrett Stanford, assistant University librarian since March 1, 1946.

A native of Moorhead, Minn., where he was born March 31, 1910, Stanford earned a bachelor of arts degree from Williams college, Williams~~son~~^{town}, Mass., in 1932, and the degree of bachelor of science in library science from the University of Illinois in 1934. He received the doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Chicago in 1942 after three year's study in the graduate library school there.

In 1942-43, he served as special representative of the United States civil service commission, and while in the army from 1943 to 1945, his duties included service as an instructor in army library operation at the base information and education officers staff school at Shrivenham, England.

Stanford's responsibilities at the University of Minnesota have included administration of the library's personnel program, supervision of its branch libraries and teaching a course in the division of library instruction.

A member of the American Library association and the Association of College and Reference Libraries, Stanford has been a frequent contributor to library periodicals and is the author of "Library Extension Under WPA" published by the University of Chicago Press in 1944.

The new acting librarian is married and has one son. He lives at 2075 Scudder avenue, St. Paul.

UNIVERSITY SELLS
TWO MINNEAPOLIS
OFFICE BUILDINGS

(FOR RELEASE 11 A.M. TUESDAY, JULY 10)

Minneapolis ---Sale of the Flour and Corn Exchange buildings in Minneapolis by the University of Minnesota Board of Regents for $440,000 was reported Tuesday (July 10) by William T. Middlebrook, secretary of the board and business vice president of the University.

The two office buildings, which stand on diagonally opposite corners at 3rd street, south, and 4th avenue in downtown Minneapolis, were purchased by the Minneapolis Syndicate, Inc., a subsidiary of Baker Properties, Inc.

William Henry Eustis, late Minneapolis financier and philanthropist, gave the buildings to the University in the twenties as part of a proposed $2,000,000 endowment which he entrusted to the Regents for the care of crippled children. The University received a four-fifths interest in the structures in 1924 and the remaining one-fifth interest in 1926, but Eustis continued to operate the buildings until January 1, 1929, when the Regents assumed the operation.

In establishing the endowment, Eustis set a valuation of $1,125,000 on the two properties. Middlebrook explained that in order to realize Eustis' objective, University administrators set up a plan of re-investing in securities an annual depreciation charge made against the income from the buildings. Balance of the income over the years along with income from the rest of the endowment was used for the care of crippled children.

"We held the buildings," Middlebrook said Tuesday, "until the re-invested depreciation charges plus the proceeds from sale of the properties would equal the $1,125,000 valuation set by Mr. Eustis, thus insuring the integrity of the gift.

"It is the firm policy of the University," Middlebrook asserted, "to return endowment property to the tax rolls as soon as possible while still keeping faith with the donor."

With the addition of proceeds from the sale of the Flour and Corn Exchange buildings, the Eustis fund for crippled children will have a valuation of $2,600,000, according to the University vice president.

Income from the Eustis fund now approximates $55,000 annually, Middlebrook reported. Of this sum, $45,000 is applied to the support of the Eustis wing for crippled children in University Hospitals, and $10,000 goes to the new Variety Club Heart hospital for the care of children crippled by heart ailments such as rheumatic fever.

MEMORIAL AUG. 29

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Bids on the construction of the re-designed Mayo Memorial Medical Center at the University of Minnesota will be opened August 29, William T. Middlebrook, University vice president for business administration, reported today.

Planned as a 22-story building, the project had to be scaled down to 12 floors when the 1951 Legislature declined to appropriate the additional funds necessary to construct the larger center. The University has asked that bids submitted be based on a 12-story building, but also has requested alternate bids for two additional floors. Thus, if the alternate bids fall within the $9,000,000 estimate for the project, a 14-story center will be built.

Work on the foundation of the center, started about a year ago, has been completed.

The center will be a memorial to Drs. William J. and Charles H. Mayo of Rochester. The Mayo brothers died in 1939.

Bids were opened by University officials Thursday (July 12) for a basic science building for the school of veterinary medicine on the St. Paul campus. The bids are being studied by University engineers. The 1949 Legislature appropriated $600,000 for the project.

MINNESOTA STUDENTS IN PERU ENGAGED IN PROGRAM OF STUDY AND GOOD WILL

Minneapolis ---Twelve students from the University of Minnesota are now in Peru engaged in a unique program to promote good will among nations, on the theory that the better the people of different countries know each other, the better friends they will be.

These specially selected students arrived in Lima recently by air and immediately started to work on their projects. Each one has mapped out a certain feature of Peruvian economic, cultural and social life for detailed study.

One of them, Mary Anne Constantine of Minneapolis, is going to study the colorful folk dances of the country, such as the marinera, huaynito and the resbalosa. Archeological research into incaic and pre-incaic civilizations of Peru will provide a rich field of study for Marilyn Miller of Glenwood. Helen Thompson of Albert Lea will concentrate on Peru's important sugar industry, while Melvin Solberg/will look into the general subject of agricultural production. Lawrence Gallagher/is investigating social welfare activities of the Catholic church, and Barbara Jesten/is doing the same for the protestant missions in Peru. Other fields of research are handicrafts, local government organization, labor legislation and social security, testing for vocational aptitudes, tuberculosis control and industrial organization.

The group is headed by Dr. Asher Christensen, professor of political science at the University of Minnesota, who is an old hand in Latin America. From 1943 - 1945, he was cultural attache of the United States Embassy in Buenos Aires, and in 1947 served as Visiting Lecturer at the Universidad Central in Caracas, Venezuela. He has also lectured in Paraguay, Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala.

"The students have come down here with a serious purpose," reports Dr. Christensen, "and have lost no time getting under way with their projects. Part of my duties with the group are to help arrange local contacts for them, so that they can obtain information connected with their field of interest. However, I find that most of them are three steps ahead of me all the time, because of their eagerness to get started.

"They have had a most cordial reception by Panagra, by Peruvian educational leaders, and by local businessmen," he continued. "We were guests at the inauguration of the special courses at the University of San Marcos, and were delighted to be so honored by the oldest university in the Americas."

Students who are making the trip, in addition to those already mentioned, are Joyce Nelson of Madelia, Bonnie Bradfield of Pine River, Mary Jean Smith of Heron Lake, Ralph Mendelson of San Francisco, and two Minneapolis girls, Joan Carlson and Ruth Forbes.

Dr. Christensen explained that this visit to Peru is part of a program called SPAN (Student Project for Amity Among Nations) sponsored by the University of Minnesota and now in its fifth year. Other groups of students on a similar mission are now in England, Germany, France and Israel.

"Students are selected in the fall on the basis of scholarship, the project they have elected, and their proficiency in the language of the country they have chosen," said Dr. Christensen. "They then meet once a week during the school year for orientation lectures by members of the University staff, and also make advance arrangements for their trip.

"One of the most valuable results of the program is that after these students return, they travel all over the state giving talks to various clubs," he concluded. "In this way the work they have done is valuable not only to themselves, but to many communities throughout Minnesota."

Most of the expenses of the trip are financed by the students themselves, although the University and public-spirited citizens also contribute to the program.

The group plans to return to Minneapolis via Panagra about September 10.

MINNESOTA 'U' DOCTOR CITES PROBLEMS
INVOLVED IN USE OF SULFA DRUGS,
ANTIBIOTICS IN LONDON ADDRESS

(FOR RELEASE 11 A.M. WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1951)

Minneapolis ---Widespread use of the sulfa drugs and antibiotics such as penicillin, streptomycin, aureomycin, terramycin and chloromycetin has created serious problems in the practice of medicine although these drugs are highly effective in the management of serious infections.

Dangers involved in the use of the "miracle" drugs in the treatment of patients were cited today (July 18) in London, England, by Dr. Wesley W. Spink, professor of medicine at the University of Minnesota, in his opening address before the microbiology section of the International Congress of Clinical Pathology.

"Because the antibiotics are so effective," Dr. Spink warned, "there is a tendency to administer them---often without the advice of a physician---before determining the cause of a given infection.

"In the seriously ill patient, careful bacteriologic studies should be initiated before these drugs are prescribed. In this way catastrophes will be prevented."

The Minnesota medical scientist pointed out that treatment with penicillin results in a dramatic improvement in the patient with a sore throat due to the streptococcus, but in a patient with a sore throat due to diphtheria, penicillin may not prevent a fatal illness. In the latter case, he added, antitoxin (serum) is indicated as the proper treatment.

"Similarly, pneumonia caused by the pneumococcus is promptly controlled with penicillin, but when pneumonia is due to the tubercle bacillus, penicillin is of little value."

Dr. Spink also warned that because the antibiotics are so successful against certain microbes, other more resistant bacteria are given more of a chance to thrive in human tissues and to cause serious disease.

The causative agents of serious respiratory disease---bacteria such as the pneumococcus and streptococcus---are readily eliminated from the body with the aid of antibiotics, he explained. However, the more resistant bacteria associated with infections of the kidney are given a chance to reproduce more rapidly when the competing bacteria are eliminated, and this results in invasion of the body.

"More and more blood stream infections are being caused by gram-negative organisms (the resistant bacteria associated with kidney infections) which have their reservoir in the normal gastro-intestinal tract," reported Dr. Spink. "This phenomenon of a group of bacteria given a chance to grow at the expense of another group is an excellent example of how difficult it is to control nature. The antibiotics solve the problems associated with one group of infections, but in doing so, upset biologic equilibrium, and new problems are induced."

One of the more serious problems confronting doctors today in various parts of the world, the Minnesota scientist continued, is the emergence of bacteria that are highly resistant to the antibiotics. Previously, these bacteria were quite readily killed off by the drugs. This resistance, he added, is particularly challenging with the staphylococcus which causes boils, septicemia (blood poisoning) and osteomyelitis.

He told the assembled microbiologists that this problem has been under investigation at the University of Minnesota for several years.

Because there are so many antibiotics now available, and because each one has a certain specific action against certain bacteria, it is essential in some serious diseases, according to Dr. Spink, not only to isolate and identify the bacteria causing the disease but to determine in the laboratory with simple tests which antibiotic is most deadly for the bacteria causing the disease.

This is extremely important, he cautioned, in the disease bacterial endocarditis, an infection of the heart valves, which is almost 100 per cent fatal unless properly treated. The right antibiotic must be selected and treatment carried on for weeks, he advised.

"A significant development in many laboratories, including ours," asserted Dr. Spink, "is the combining of two or more antibiotics for the treatment of infections. It has been found that such combinations are more effective than the use of either one alone.

"While aureomycin is effective in treatment of brucellosis (undulant fever), there is some evidence," he disclosed, "that better results are obtained when streptomycin is also given to the patient. Also, in the treatment of some serious blood infections, a combination of penicillin and streptomycin is superior to either one used alone."

Dr. Spink, brucellosis expert for the United Nations and director of the United States Brucellosis Center at the University of Minnesota, is spending the summer in England, France, Italy and Yugoslavia correlating current brucellosis research in those countries. He is also serving as consultant to local health authorities in Europe on their specific brucellosis problems. During his tour, he also will visit several Swiss universities and clinics.

Composer Earl George will give "A Perspective on Recent American Music" at 3 p.m. Wednesday (Aug. 8) in Nicholson hall auditorium on the University of Minnesota campus. His talk, the second lecture in a series on American culture, is open to the public free of charge.

A music instructor at the University, George's music has been performed by such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic Symphony, the Minneapolis Symphony and the Vancouver Symphony. His "A Thanksgiving Overture" won the 1950 Boosey-Hawkes University of Illinois prize for orchestral composition.

George's speech will include a historical resume of American music in relation to other arts in this country -- especially literature, a survey of American composers since 1925 and a discussion of the turn toward conservatism in American music since 1930.

To illustrate his points, George will play selections from the works of Louis Gottschalk, Charles Griffes, Roy Harris, Aaron Copland and his own composition -- Prelude, Aria and Burlesca for Two Pianos.

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Robert Leighton, photographer-lecturer, will show his colored motion picture -- "Dutch Guiana Portrait" -- at 8:30 p.m. Monday (Aug. 6) in Northrop Memorial auditorium. The University of Minnesota convocation program will be open to the public free of charge.

Made during the last year, Leighton calls his film a "study in human relationships rather than a travelogue of obvious sightseeing places". The native population of Dutch Guiana -- consisting largely of Bush Negroes, Javanese and the aboriginal Arawak and Carib Indians -- is the focal point of the movie. Leighton travelled deep into the Guiana Equatorial rain forests to photograph them in their natural jungle environment.

The photographer-lecturer and his wife have made some 15 trips to Latin America. Fascinated with primitive cultures and black magic, Leighton resumed his photographic explorations of the Caribbean area shortly after World War II.

A Philadelphia by birth, he has lived in Chicago for the past 16 years, working on several of the local newspapers.

Publication by the University of Minnesota Press of the book, "Opera for the People", by Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, is scheduled for October 18. The book tells how opera can be developed by community civic groups, school and college workshops, and in television, radio, and motion pictures to become a real force in the musical life of American communities.

Graf will return to the United States the end of August after spending three months in Europe as guest stage director for summer opera festivals in Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria. He directed the staging of a new production of Verdi's "Otello" which had its opening performance at the Salzburg festival on August 7, and will be repeated in a number of subsequent performances.

6,625 IN YEAR

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis --Short courses for business, labor, professional and government groups -- designed to keep them abreast of current developments and modern techniques -- brought 6,625 people to the University of Minnesota's Center for Continuation Study during the last year.

Between July 1, 1950 and June 30, 1951, the Center offered 109 courses, according to the report by director Norman Johnson. Most of the seminars ran for three days, although some were a day long and others -- such as continuation courses in dentistry and X-ray technology -- lasted for three months.

The courses are geared to bring wage-earners of all kinds -- dentists and doctors, school teachers, city engineers, truck drivers -- up-to-date on new trends in their field. Many out-of-town specialists are brought in to lecture at the courses, which are usually taught by University professors.

Out of the 6,625 registrations, 4,937 of the students were Minnesotans, 1,624 came from other states and 64 were from foreign countries.

Since the Center opened its doors in November 1936, it has presented 1,046 courses. Technological courses have been the best attended with national defense, commercial and labor courses ranking close behind in popularity.

The Center was the brain-child of a former University president, Lotus D. Coffman. For many years it offered a service which was unique among American universities.

Classrooms, a cafeteria, dormitory space for people attending classes, a garage, a chapel and a lounge make up the Center. It functions as a part of the University's general extension division.

NEW HANDBOOK
WILL AID CLUB
PROGRAM CHAIRMEN

(FOR RELEASE THURSDAY, SEPT. 13)

Minneapolis ---Need a speaker for a week from Thursday on child development, geology, the United Nations, safety, taxes --- or health?

Club program chairmen, faced with that perennial headache of planning a good program week after week throughout the coming months, are being offered a helping hand by the Minnesota Council on Adult Education.

The Council has put together something new -- the "Program Planners Handbook: A Directory of Adult Education Facilities in the State of Minnesota". The book outlines a wide variety of resources available for programs before clubs, church groups, civic associations and just plain get-togethers.

Contained in the "Handbook" are statements from scores of Minnesota agencies telling about the speakers, films, literature, discussion guides and exhibits they can provide for group meetings. Contributors include such associations as the Izaak Walton League, the Minnesota World Affairs Center, the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, the University of Minnesota's Audio-Visual Extension service, the American Swedish Institute, the Minnesota Historical Society and the Governor's Interracial Commission.

Also listed are other state and local groups which carry on active adult education programs; several federal and state government agencies; colleges, universities, museums and libraries. All offer something about problems of general public interest.

The Council, which has its headquarters at the State Organization Service of the University of Minnesota, estimates that there are about 10,000 program chairmen in the state who might use the "Handbook". This is the first attempt to collect program resources in one book.

The "Handbook" may be purchased for one dollar from the Minnesota Council on Adult Education, State Organization Service, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis 14.

UNIVERSITY AWARDS
BUILDING CONTRACTS FOR MAYO MEMORIAL

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Contracts totaling $9,678,770 for construction of the Mayo Memorial Medical Center on the University of Minnesota campus have been awarded, according to a report from William T. Middlebrook, University vice president for business administration.

The re-designed building will consist of 14 stories. Originally planned as a 22-story structure, the project had to be pared down when the 1951 Legislature declined to appropriate additional funds for the larger center.

Bidders who received contracts and their low bids were announced by Middlebrook as follows: general construction, the Madsen Construction company, Minneapolis, and the Steenberg Construction company, St. Paul, $5,630,632; mechanical construction, the Harris Brothers Plumbing company, Minneapolis, $2,140,181; electrical construction, the Batzli Electric company, Minneapolis, $757,657; refrigeration work, King-Fruen, Inc., Minneapolis, $32,857.87; air conditioning work, the Westerlin and Campbell company, St. Paul, $161,890; elevator and dumb-waiter work, the Otis Elevator company, Chicago, $284,674; and record conveyor installation, the Standard Conveyor company, North St. Paul, $12,634.

The bids were opened Wednesday, Aug. 29. University administrative officials accepted the bids upon authorization of the University's Board of Regents. Construction will get underway as soon as final approval is secured from the United States Public Health Service.

Contracts previously awarded -- for excavation, foundation work, structural steel erection, utilities and site work -- will bring the total cost of the Mayo Memorial project to $11,609,990.

In addition to 14 stories, the building will also include an auditorium and a two-level garage. The new contracts cover completion of the entire project -- except for the 14th floor, which will be enclosed with option to finish later.

When the U.S. Public Health Service clearance is received, general contractors will start preparations for erection of the structural steel. The steel, already allocated by the Federal Security agency, should start going up about Jan. 1, 1952. Foundations for the building are finished.

Funds for the Mayo Memorial Medical Center were provided by appropriations of the 1945, 1947 and 1949 Legislature -- $7,000,000; by grants from the National Cancer Institute; National Heart Institute; and by private gifts. Two million dollars came from the U.S. Public Health Service from funds provided by the Hill-Burton Act.

The center will be a memorial to the late Drs. William J. Mayo and Charles H. Mayo of Rochester. The brothers died in 1939.

Minneapolis ---An enlarged program of medical seminars -- conducted for practicing physicians by the University of Minnesota medical school -- will start Wednesday (Sept. 12) and Thursday (Sept. 13) in key cities throughout the state.

This year's regional programs, dealing with such topics as therapeutics and X-ray film interpretation, are going to be held in 10 Minnesota cities: Worthington, Austin, Rochester, Faribault, Mankato, Glencoe, Willmar, St. Cloud, Alexandria and Hibbing.

The meetings are planned each year by the University medical school's department of postgraduate education and are presented in cooperation with the State Medical association. Beginning Wednesday (Sept. 12), talks on these topics will get underway -- therapeutics at Hibbing General hospital; dermatology at St. Joseph's hospital, Mankato; electrocardiography at the American Legion club, Alexandria; fractures and traumatic surgery at St. Olaf's hospital, Austin, and also at the St. Cloud hospital; and gastroenterology at Rice Memorial hospital, Willmar.

The four seminars that start Thursday (Sept. 13) will be held at Johnston hall, St. Luke's hospital, Faribault, on pediatrics; the Glencoe Memorial hospital on X-ray film interpretation; Room 1536 of the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, on gynecology; and at the Worthington hospital where another course in therapeutics is offered.

SET SEPT. 23-29

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---How to stretch a college dollar, the best methods for taking good lecture notes and tips on how to pick a career are some of the things which new University of Minnesota students will learn at this year's Welcome Week, Sept. 23-29. A traditional event, the week will also be highlighted by a variety of social activities.

Plans also include a special round of events to introduce students' parents to the campus Sunday afternoon, Sept. 23. They will hear brief talks by leading University administrators and faculty members will take them on tours through college buildings. Afterwards, University President J.L. Morrill will meet with parents.

Student Welcome Week activities will start Sunday night, Sept. 23, with an informal party sponsored by the University YMCA-YWCA. The following day, new students will meet in club groups -- a unit organized when they went through a two-day orientation-registration program earlier this summer. These groups will get together each morning of Welcome Week.

Informative events planned during the week include a series of "College Cues" -- talks on college curriculums, finances and vocational training -- a meeting with Dean of Students Edmund G. Williamson, an international program featuring singing and dancing by foreign students and a dramatization of personnel services available to students.

Group-faculty bull-sessions, a preview glimpse of Minnesota's Golden Gophers in action and a tour through Cooke hall - the men's athletic building -- are among new features of Welcome Week. New students will meet for games, a smorgasbord supper and a "Blue Jean Ball" on the St. Paul campus Thursday afternoon, Sept. 27.

Other social highlights scheduled for the week are a visit to campus religious foundations, a comedy program by the Minnesota Masquers, a banquet and the new student talent show. The "Welcome Whirl" dance, following Saturday's, Sept. 29, game with Washington, will climax the week.

AERIAL PROSPECTORS REPORT
SEVEN MORE POSSIBLE IRON
FORMATIONS IN N. MINNESOTA

(FOR RELEASE 11 A.M. SEPT. 21, 1951)

Minneapolis ---Discovery in northern Minnesota of seven extensive belts of high magnetic attraction which possibly indicate iron-bearing rock formations was disclosed Friday (Sept. 21) by the United States Geological Survey and the Minnesota Geological survey.

Announcement of the find was made along with the public release of seven additional maps based on the aeromagnetic survey of approximately 45,000 square miles in the northern half of the state which has been underway since 1947 as a joint project of the federal agency and the Minnesota survey.

Maps released Friday cover all of Lake of the Woods county and parts of Koochiching, Beltrami, Roseau and Clearwater counties---an area of about 6,000 square miles. Previous maps of the aerial survey included some 25,000 square miles and indicated potential iron formations in Itasca, St. Louis, Cass, Hubbard, Becker, Otter Tail, Morrison and Aitkin counties. Mining companies are now exploring several of these indicated formations in a search for commercial iron ore.

Dr. G. M. Schwartz, director of the Minnesota Geological survey and professor of geology at the University of Minnesota, Friday reported the seven new discoveries in the aerial "treasure hunt" for iron resources as follows:

1. A wide and irregular belt extending from the Rainy river east of Baudette in a generally southwesterly direction for about 40 miles. This area ranges from two to six miles in width and is located in the Big Bog country north of Red Lake. "We don't know exactly what this band of high magnetic attraction means geologically," Dr. Schwartz said, "because there are no significant rock outcrops in the bog country to give us a hint as to the nature of the underlying rock structure. Extensive exploration by core drilling will be necessary to ascertain the make up of the sub-surface formations."

2. A band 30 miles long and roughly five miles wide in Koochiching county running southwest from the vicinity of Indus to the Lake of the Woods and Koochiching county line where the formation appears to end abruptly. One of the highest magnetic intensity readings yet obtained in the aerial survey was found in this formation, Dr. Schwartz revealed. The high reading, 15,000 gammas of magnetic intensity, was recorded in Township 158 North, Range 27 West in Koochiching county, he reported.

3. A strip 18 miles long and one mile wide beneath the bed of lower Red lake in Beltrami county. This indicated formation extends from the northeast corner of the lower lake near Ponemah to the west shore.

4. An area 30 miles long and up to four miles wide running in an east-west direction along the south shore of lower Red lake.

5. A hook-shaped formation about 20 miles long by two miles wide in southwestern Koochiching county north of Mizpah.

6. A long, narrow belt, 22 miles long by about one mile wide, lying in an east-west position in east central Koochiching county.

7. A short band 10 miles by two miles in Koochiching county just south of International Falls. Dr. Schwartz believes that this band may be the eastern end of an eastward extension through Canada of the formation indicated just south of Indus (No. 2 above).

The seven new maps outlining these promising areas were placed on public display Friday at the office of the Minnesota Geological survey, Pillsbury hall, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis; at the office of the United States Bureau of Mines, Federal building, Duluth; and at the office of the Division of lands and Minerals, Hibbing.

Beginning October 1, the aerial prospectors will direct their search for new Minnesota iron deposits to the northwest corner of the state where they will record the magnetic pattern in a 6,900-square-mile area including all of Marshall, Pennington and Kittson counties and part of Roseau, Red Lake and Polk counties.

Another prospecting expedition over an area in the Superior National Forest in northeastern Minnesota is also planned for this fall, according to Schwartz. The district to be covered includes the location in which recent discoveries of copper and nickel ores have been reported.

Used in the survey work is an instrument known as the airborne magnetometer, nicknamed the "doodlebug", a device which detects and records variations in the earth's magnetic intensity while being flown by an airplane over the survey area at an altitude of 1,000 feet in paths one mile apart.

Enclosed in a bomb-shaped container, the magnetometer's detector unit is suspended on a long cable from a specially equipped airplane operated by experts from the United States Geological survey. The recording device is carried in the airplane cabin. The instrument is similar to a device developed during World War II for detecting submerged submarines from the air.

In addition to their value in locating and outlining possible iron formations which may contain valuable deposits of iron ore, the maps and data based on the aeromagnetic survey are of great value in determining and understanding the geology of the state, Dr. Schwartz explained.

Dr. Schwartz emphasized the necessity of checking the results of the aeromagnetometer readings by means of careful ground surveys and core drilling in zones which appear "promising" before making any predictions as to the existence in these areas of commercially interesting iron deposits.

Miss Templin will broadcast direct from the classroom every Monday, Wednesday and Friday during the University's fall quarter.

Children learn more quickly than adults because they have better powers of concentration, Miss Templin says. They also have fewer distractions to interfere with learning.

Children concentrate on learning a new skill at the expense of other habits, however. When learning to talk a child will forget all he has learned about eating or about toilet training and concentrate on talking, Miss Templin says.

Miss Templin received her bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees in speech correction at the University of Wisconsin. She earned her doctor of philosophy degree in child welfare at the University of Minnesota. Her thesis was based on a study of learning in deaf children.

If you can find a "whipping boy", any controversial and vexing problem becomes easy. Life, with its silly build-up of college athletic stars, its exaggerated glorification of coaching wizards, has strengthened the public pressures which make it hard for college presidents and faculties to keep athletics in balance. In publications like Life, in newspapers like the Minneapolis Star, and among institutions like the University of Minnesota, intercollegiate football receives attention all out of proportion to its relative importance, as everybody in his right mind knows. But we need not throw out the baby with the bath. Rock-throwers should stay out of glass houses.

American college football is a grand game, with fine values for both those who play and watch it. Undeniably we need stricter rules and better enforcement. There are sincere and sensible college presidents, teachers, athletic administrators and coaches who will keep on working for both.

CRIPPLED CHILD
RELIEF GIVES 'U'
$10,000 FOR CENTER

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Purchase of equipment for the hydrotherapy unit of the University of Minnesota's projected new rehabilitation center for the physically handicapped has been made possible by a gift of $10,000 from Crippled Child Relief, Inc., University President J. L. Morrill reported Thursday (Sept. 27).

Crippled Child Relief, Inc., previously gave the University $25,000 to be used in equipping the occupational therapy unit of the rehabilitation center which will occupy two floors of the new Mayo Memorial Medical Center now under construction.

"Today it is no longer sufficient merely to relieve pain or to cure fevers and acute illnesses," President Morrill stated. "Complete medical care requires that the patient be restored to his normal place as an independent productive person in his community. Rehabilitation, as a part of medicine, is concerned with the treatment and training of the handicapped patient so that he can become productive and independent."

The University's new center, the president explained, will be devoted to rehabilitation work in its three major phases: research to develop new and better methods, training of personnel in rehabilitation methods, and treatment of patients.

Plans for the center provide for five units: occupational therapy, hydrotherapy, physical therapy, gymnasium and pre-vocational training.

"The assistance provided by Crippled Child Relief through the Greater University Fund," President Morrill commented, "will make it possible for the University to do much more and to progress much faster in its rehabilitation program".

MOLDS AND HOW THEY AFFECT MAN
TOPIC OF NEW BOOK

(FOR RELEASE SEPT. 30, 1951)

Minneapolis --When the bread in your breadbox gets moldy during humid summer weather, it is not necessarily the baker's fault," explains Dr. Clyde M. Christensen in his book "The Molds and Man" to be published Wednesday (Oct. 3) by the University of Minnesota Press.

"Many otherwise fine housekeepers maintain what amounts to a forcing chamber for molds in their breadboxes," the author states, "and then complain of the quality of the bread."

Most bakeries today make bread that is far more wholesome, cleaner, more nutritious and appetizing than the bread "mother used to bake", says Dr. Christensen, who is a mycologist in the plant pathology department at the University of Minnesota.

His new book tells, in everyday language, the basic facts about fungi -- how they live and reproduce and how they affect other plants and animals. The emphasis is on the common, ever-present molds that affect the health, food, clothing and houses of everyone, but which are almost unknown except to professional students of fungi.

Ergot, the fungus drug that recently caused a number of deaths in France among persons who ate bread made from infected rye flour, has caused almost no serious outbreaks of ergotism in the last hundred years, Dr. Christensen points out in his book. This is not because ergot is no longer present in grain, he explains, but because ergot was finally recognized as the cause of such poisoning, and methods were developed to eliminate it from the grain. The consumer in this country is protected against the danger of ergot poisoning by the vigilance of elevator men, grain inspectors, millers and the Food and Drug administration.

Chapters in the book, "The Molds and Man", describe the partnerships between fungi and other plants, partnerships between fungi and insects, diseases of plants caused by fungi, the destruction of various kinds of essential materials by molds and commercial products made with the aid of molds. A classification of the fungi summarizes material that is known about the major groups of fungi and delves into questions and quirks of taxonomy or scientific classification.

Dr. Christensen has done much research in mycological problems and has published many technical papers on plant pathology, mycology and industrial mycology, especially in the field of fungi in relation to the deterioration of wood, stored grain, and flour and in the field of aerobiology. His work has aided in the discovery of better molds for the production of penicillin and in solving problems of deterioration of glues in plywood and paperboard. The latter research proved, for the first time, that fungi and bacteria, not chemical action, cause protein glues to fail.

Dr. Christensen also is the author of a book previously published by the University of Minnesota Press, "Common Edible Mushrooms,"

FDR'S REJECTION OF INVALID'S LIFE
MOST IMPORTANT DECISION, WIDOW SAYS

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

When former President Franklin D. Roosevelt chose to work and participate in politics instead of retiring to the life of an invalid he made his most important decision -- in the opinion of his widow.

Mrs. Roosevelt's view was learned this week in a letter from Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. to Betty Girling, director of the Minnesota School of the Air at the University of Minnesota.

Miss Girling requested the information from the younger Roosevelt in connection with a series of broadcasts over KUOM, the University of Minnesota radio station. The series, entitled "The Silent Moment" will dramatize the most important decisions in the lives of four famous Americans.

In his answer Franklin Roosevelt, Jr. said he had asked his mother to prepare an answer for Miss Girling. She replied:

"I think perhaps the most important decision made by President Roosevelt was when he decided he would not be an invalid in spite of his attack of polio; but would return to the greatest amount of health and activity possible, and in whatever condition, he would still work in the world.

"He made this decision that he would get well as far as possible because he did not like to be dependent and he wanted to feel able, at least, to look after himself. Then when the chance came to go back to business, he made the decision that he would make the daily effort of going to an office rather than to retire to the country and live in comparative peace and quiet. Then when the opportunity came to go back into public life, particularly when he went to the first national Democratic convention and then when he was asked to run for governor, he was tremendously torn as to whether he should try to improve his health or whether he was to begin to do work in the world and make it possible in spite of his handicap.

"He made his decision, and the first campaign for governor was an ordeal because everything he was doing was a new experiment, but from then on he knew he had charted his course and he never wavered."

The portrayal of Franklin D. Roosevelt's most important decision will be aired over KUOM, Dec. 5.

The extent of freedom in America today is the theme of "America Bound" a three-part radio series which will be resumed at 12 noon Wednesday (Oct. 3) on KUOM, University of Minnesota radio station.

"The White Legacy", "The Disinherited" and "Joint-Heirship for All Americans" are the themes of the series. The first deals with civil rights already enjoyed by white Americans. Limited benefits of non-white citizens and recent civil rights gains will be discussed in subsequent programs.

The present series, which deals with the practical aspects of civil rights, stems from a previous series last year which covered the broader problem of freedom as a western ideal. The series will run through June 9, 1952.

MINNESOTA 'U' PRESS
TO PUBLISH HISTORY OF FLOUR MILLING

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---The University of Minnesota Press has just completed arrangements for the publication of a comprehensive history of flour milling, Mrs. Margaret S. Harding, director of the Press, announced Wednesday (Oct. 3).

The book, which will be published next summer, is by John Storek and Walter Dorwin Teague who were commissioned by General Mills, Inc., to carry out the research and writing project.

Storek, who holds the doctor of philosophy degree from Columbia university, served for a number of years on the teaching staffs at Columbia and at Sarah Lawrence college. In 1944, he joined the staff of Walter Dorwin Teague, the industrial designer, to do research and writing on war projects. He received the Naval Ordnance Development award for his work on basic hydraulics, prepared by the Teague staff to interpret the subject to naval gunner's mates.

Author of the book, "Man and Civilization", a work widely used in colleges and universities, he has lectured and written extensively on new methods of solving problems that have developed recently in science, engineering, social relations, and the arts.

Teague, a pioneer and leader in the field of industrial design, has been a consultant for many of America's top industries. He is one of the founders and was the first president of the Society of Industrial Design and is the president of the American Institute of Graphic Arts. Recently he was named Honorary Designer for Industry of the Royal Society of Arts of Great Britain. He is the author of the book, "Design This Day -- The Technique of Order in the Machine Age", and of numerous magazine articles on industrial design and related subjects.

The forthcoming book traces the development of flour milling throughout the world from prehistoric times to the present, with emphasis on technological processes. The story encompasses much of the history of power sources and their utilization in manufacturing. The authors outline the progress of grain cultivation through the stages of civilization up to modern times with the specialized production of various kinds of grain for specific types of flour required in today's commercial and home baking.

The book will be illustrated with some 150 original drawings, the work of Harold Rydell. It will contain a foreword by James F. Bell, founder of General Mills and chairman of its committee on finance and technological progress.

UNIVERSITY HOSPITALS
ADMIT 10,680
DURING YEAR

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---The 10,680 patients admitted to the University of Minnesota during the year ending June 30, 1951, made an average stay of 13.3 days, according to the annual report of Ray M. Amberg, hospitals director.

During the previous year, the hospitals admitted 11,081 patients, more than ever before, and their average length of stay was 12.7 days.

Daily average population of the hospitals during the last year, Amberg reported, was 391, slightly higher than the 386 average for the year before. Days of hospital care provided during the year totaled 142,885 as compared with 140,893 days in 1949-50.

Surgical operations performed at University Hospitals during the last year numbered 7,783 or 282 more than the previous year's total of 7,501 operations.

Visits to the hospitals' out-patient department during the year totaled 100,656, while the total for the year before was 102,992 visits.

The cost of operating the hospitals' in-patient department has been rising steadily in recent years, and last year was no exception, Amberg pointed out. The cost per patient per day was $18.86, in increase of 30 cents. The cost for the year ending June 30, 1946, was only $9.45 per day, he recalled.

Cost per patient visit to the out-patient department was $4.09 last year, an increase of 27 cents over 1949-50 and far above the $2.85 cost per visit in the operating year 1945-46.

University of Minnesota Hospitals were established primarily to furnish a means for the University to train medical students in clinical medicine. This training is given in the hospitals and the out-patient department under the direct supervision and guidance of a staff of full-time and part-time physicians.

"This arrangement," Amberg asserted, "has proved satisfactory, not only in the training of medical students but also as an economical means for the state to care for many of its indigent sick."

Rules of the hospital require that each patient be referred for admission to the out-patient department or the hospitals by his family physician or by a physician in his local community.

Dr. Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will come to the Twin Cities from New York this week for the publication on Thursday (Oct. 18) of his book, "Opera for the People", by the University of Minnesota Press. He will be honored at a luncheon to be given by the University Press Thursday at Coffman Memorial Union. That afternoon at 3:30 he will give a special lecture in Scott Hall auditorium under the auspices of the University's department of concerts and lectures, the music department and the University Press.

In his forthcoming book Dr. Graf advocates a "new deal" for opera in America. He outlines plans for "opera without top hat" - methods by which the musical theater can become a vital force in the musical life of communities. Among changes he urges are the establishment of broader community sponsorship of opera companies, greater use of local artists, the singing of opera in English whenever possible and more frequent performances of contemporary works and lesser-known older operas.

Dr. Graf has been associated with the Metropolitan Opera for 16 years. In addition to serving as stage director, he is artistic director for the Met's television department. As a pioneer in the production of opera for television, he sees television as a major factor in the increased interest now being manifest in opera in this country. When operas are produced for telecasts he thinks they should be given in English rather than in foreign languages, acting ability should be a requisite, and scenery, costumes, and make-up should be more realistic than they are for the legitimate stage.

2025 RELEASE UNDER E.O. 14176

The new book explains the elements of opera production, including the libretto, the music, the language, the sponsorship, the staging and the building. American opera as it is performed on Broadway, in community style companies, in university, college, and music school workshops, and in motion pictures, radio, and television is surveyed. On a basis of this analysis, the author offers his plans for a people's opera. The book includes 104 illustrations of stage sets by modern designers, new opera buildings, architects' designs for theaters, productions by community and school groups, television and motion picture productions, singers and costumes.

Dr. Graf has been guest stage director for numerous opera festivals both in this country and abroad. During the past summer he staged operas for festivals at Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria. At the Boboli Gardens in Florence he stated the seldom produced Von Weber opera, "Oberon", and at Salzburg in August he staged a new version of Verdi's "Otello".

After doing a new "Rigoletto" production at the Met on November 15 and a revival of "Figaro" for a broadcast on November 17, he will fly the same night, November 17, to Milan, Italy, to stage the opening performance at La Scala of "Vespri Siciliani" on December 7. He plans to return to New York December 10 for rehearsals of "Gotterdammerung" at the Metropolitan.

A native of Vienna, Dr. Graf has been in the United States since 1936. He has been guest stage director for opera festivals at San Francisco, Chicago and Central City, Colo. He founded the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center and served as its director from 1940 to 1942, and was formerly director of operatic production for NBC television. In addition to his work with the Metropolitan, Dr. Graf is director of the opera department at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

'U' SCIENTIST FINDS
ANCIENT INDIAN
JAVELIN POINTS

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Javelin points fashioned from stone by Indians living in Minnesota before 900 A.D. are part of the Indian "treasure" dug up this summer by Dr. Lloyd A. Wilford, University of Minnesota anthropology professor.

The University scientist, who specializes in the study of early Minnesota Indian cultures, spends each summer touring the state -- excavating Indian burials from ancient mounds and digging up Indian pottery from old village sites. His findings help him reconstruct the pattern of Indian civilization as it existed in this region centuries ago.

On this year's field trip, Dr. Wilford visited the Ralph Bryan farm west of Red Wing, a site near Ortonville, the Lewis farm between Cambria and Judson, the Ira Leslie estate near Marine-on-the-St.Croix and the H. H. McKee farm, also on the St. Croix river.

The St. Croix river sites yielded the best finds. In a cave on the Leslie property, Dr. Wilford found remains of ancient Indian fires, pottery, the stone javelin points, fish bones, clam and turtle shells, a flint knife used by woodland Indians and on the topmost level, arrowheads made by Indians who existed when the French first explored Minnesota.

"All these things," says Dr. Wilford, "indicate that the cave was used as an Indian camping site from about 900 A.D. right up through the 1700's."

On the McKee farm, the scientist discovered several Indian bundle-type burials, which may be remains of Sioux, on top of even older skeletons. An old Indian village nearby proved to be an Oneota settlement inhabited by Indians in the 16th-17th centuries.

Dr. Wilford came upon a new Silvernale habitation site, dating back to the 1500's, on the Bryan farm, but his diggings at Ortonville yielded nothing. Work early in the summer at the Lewis farm turned up some full-length-type Indian burials and a mortuary pot -- both probably left by Cambria people in the 15th century.

'U' ENROLLMENT
TOTALS 18,682,
TOPS ESTIMATES

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Fall quarter attendance at the University of Minnesota totals 18,682, a decrease of 3,398 or 15 per cent from last year's fall quarter figure of 22,080 students, True E. Pettengill, University recorder, reported Monday (Oct. 15).

The recorder pointed out that despite the drop in enrollment, the attendance total exceeds the 18,000 prediction of the University's admissions and records department. Heavier enrollment than was anticipated in the institute of technology and the college of science, literature and the arts upset the estimate, Pettengill stated.

Included in the student total for the current quarter are 17,472 students on the Twin Cities campuses and 1,210 at the Duluth Branch. The breakdown one year ago was 20,437 in St. Paul and Minneapolis and 1,643 in Duluth.

Enrollment of veterans of World War II under federal government benefits, which reached a peak of 16,736 in 1947, is down to 3,627 this year with 2,452 in the Twin Cities and 185 at Duluth.

Fewer new students entered the University this fall than a year ago, 4,978 as compared with 5,856, according to Pettengill. Among the new students, 3,079 are freshmen, 1,630 are students with advanced standing and 271 are new special students.

Men outnumber women in the University student body by seven to three, the recorder pointed out. Of the 18,682 students on the University campuses this fall, 13,229 are men and 5,453 are women.

Factors accounting for the decline in attendance from a year ago were cited by Pettengill as follows: the effect of military service, the small present high school graduating classes resulting from the low birth rate in the early nineteen thirties, the existing high employment level and the decrease in the number of veterans still eligible for GI educational benefits.

POPULARIZE OPERA,
METROPOLITAN STAGE
DIRECTOR URGES

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Opera is urged to take off its top hat and become a part of the community life of American cities and towns by Herbert Graf, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera company, in his new book, "Opera for the People", published this week (Oct. 18) by the University of Minnesota Press.

Graf advocated broader community sponsorship of opera companies, greater use of local artists, the singing of opera in English whenever possible, and more frequent performances of contemporary works and the lesser-known older operas.

He says the American operatic audience today actually numbers millions through radio and television, although the total of American opera houses is vastly outnumbered by even small European countries. He believes that if American ingenuity is applied to staging and production, a vast audience of music lovers will patronize "live opera".

In his new book, Graf gives practical, working plans to guide communities in establishing their own opera companies. He advises local groups to produce opera, not in the "grand manner", but as musical theater, and he thinks they should make their own scenery and costumes in an original way.

Graf is one of the world's foremost authorities on opera production. He has been guest stage director for numerous opera festivals both in this country and abroad. He spent the past summer in Europe, staging operas for festivals at Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria, and he will fly to Milan, Italy, in November to stage the opening production of the La Scala Opera company. He visits the Twin Cities each spring with the Metropolitan Opera company on its annual tour.

In addition to serving as stage director for the Metropolitan, Graf is artistic director for its television department, and he also is director of the opera department at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

COUNSELING BOOK

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---"Concepts and Programs of Counseling" --- a bound copy of the five papers presented at a conference of college and university counseling program administrators on the University of Minnesota campus last year -- was published this week by the University of Minnesota Press.

Edited by Ralph F. Berdie, professor of psychology and director of the University's student counseling bureau, the publication is the first in a new series of Minnesota Studies in Student Personnel Work, for which E. G. Williamson, dean of students, is series editor.

Contributors to the newly published symposium include O. Hobart Mowrer and William M. Gilbert, University of Illinois; Frank M. Fletcher, Jr., Ohio State university; John L. Holmes, Iowa State college; and Paul L. Dressel, Michigan State college.

In the introduction, Berdie points out that in the last 20 years the University counseling center has become an important part of American higher education, influencing not only the behavior of individual students but the curriculums, the teaching methods, and the administrative policies of the institutions.

Psychotherapeutic aspects of counseling as well as program developments in the field of vocational guidance at the college level are considered in the new publication. Dean Williamson, in a preface, describes the conference at which the papers were presented as the first meeting devoted by counseling administrators to their specialized and technical problems.

For the first time in its history, KUOM, University radio station, is broadcasting a program series of jazz music.

"Basic Jazz", aired at 4:15 p.m. Wednesdays, traces in words and music the development of American Jazz from its African origin to present day interpreters.

Of a historical nature, the programs are devoted to the kind of jazz that can be legitimately classified as folk music--New Orleans jazz, rag-time piano, Dixieland and the "Chicago" style.

Scripts are prepared by KUOM staff members in cooperation with the University department of American studies.

Drums recorded in Africa, a singing preacher and congregation recorded in New Orleans and music of early New Orleans' street bands have been played. A narrator explains the significance of the music and the artist's place in jazz history.

Subsequent programs will inspect each development and evaluate important individual artists.

'U' NIGHT SCHOOL
ENROLLS 6,787

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Evening class enrollment at the University of Minnesota this fall is 6,787 -- a figure which tops the number of students enrolled in any one of the University's day-time colleges.

The 6,787 students in night school turned in 8,179 registrations, which means that, on the average, they are each attending 1.2 classes. Included in the total enrollment are 2,161 veterans.

This fall's figure shows an increase of 456 students over evening school registration a year ago.

Huntington Miller, assistant dean and program director of the general extension division, speculated that the rise was due to the public's increasing awareness of the value of adult education. He stated that students, perhaps finding it hard to keep up with current advances in their jobs, are coming to night school to learn new techniques.

Miller also feels that more people are attending classes because they want to background themselves on the rapidly changing world situation or because they want to fill in educational and cultural gaps.

Over half of the registrations are in liberal arts and general classes. Approximately 30 per cent are in business and related fields.

Some classes are tailored to fit the needs of special groups of students and are added to the curriculum upon request.

Immediately following the war, there was a tremendous surge of interest in "hobby" courses. Interest in those has dropped during the last few years with people registering more heavily in vocational or academic classes.

The evening school is part of the University's general extension division headed by Dean Julius M. Nolte. Some 339 business, engineering, liberal arts and miscellaneous courses are being taught this fall.

UNIVERSITY SCIENTIST
SEEKS BONES OF ANCIENT ANIMALS

(FOR RELEASE THURSDAY, NOV. 1)

Minneapolis ---The University of Minnesota is on the lookout for old bones -- remains of pre-historic animals which roamed this state upwards of 10,000 years ago.

If any animal skulls, jawbones, teeth, leg bones or tusks are dug up anywhere in Minnesota, Herbert Wright, Jr., associate professor of geology and mineralogy, is interested in seeing them. Such finds -- when the bones are in recognizable shape and the location is properly marked -- help scientists study the evolution of ancient mammals.

Traces of elephants, musk ox, giant beaver and bison have been found in the state by farmers who accidentally plowed them up or by construction crews who ran across them while excavating.

This summer, experts investigated some giant bison bones found in north Minneapolis. By checking the surrounding layers of earth they discovered something new: giant bison apparently survived in America longer than they had suspected.

Earlier studies led these scientists to believe that all giant bison were extinct by the time the last glacier swept over Minnesota 10,000 years ago. But the newly-found bones were imbedded in a peat bog resting on the last glacial remains. How come these animals lived here then, but disappeared from the plains states? Were they driven north by hunters? That's what specialists want to know.

Minnesotans can help in this pre-historic hunt. If you discover some old animal bones, dig them up carefully and mark the spot. To learn something from them, Wright also needs to know what kind of material they were found in -- clay, sand, gravel or peat -- and also the legal description of the location, in case the find looks important enough for further investigation.

U. OF M. SURGERY
GROUP TO ATTEND
SURGEONS' CONGRESS

(FOR RELEASE SUNDAY, OCT. 28)

Minneapolis ---Dr. Owen H. Wangensteen, chairman of the department of surgery in the University of Minnesota's medical school, and eight of his colleagues will attend the thirty-seventh annual clinical congress of the American College of Surgeons in San Francisco November 5 to 9.

Accompanying Dr. Wangensteen will be Drs. George E. Moore, C. W. Lillehei, Bernard A. Zimmerman, Fletcher A. Miller, Donald J. Ferguson, Yoshio Sako, Allan Ferrin and Frederick S. Cross.

The latest knowledge in the treatment of bodily ills ranging from some as minor as a black eye to others as critical as a heart that suddenly stops on the operating table will be presented at the congress.

More than 8,000 surgeons, other physicians and guests from North and South America are expected to attend the sessions. The congress is the nation's largest scientific meeting primarily concerned with the special techniques and skills which go into the estimated 10,000,000 major operations performed each year in the United States and Canada.

The basic intent of the clinical congress, introduced in 1910 and later carried on by the American College of Surgeons, which was founded in 1913 to elevate surgical and hospital standards, has been to provide "wet clinics", with actual operations performed by surgeons in the hospitals of the area open to observation by those attending the sessions.

In recent years, however, surgeons have been able not only to see and hear highly trained colleagues demonstrate and discuss advances in surgical technique but also to hear scientific reports and see exhibits involving fundamental contributions to surgical knowledge.

Dr. Wangensteen will serve as chairman of the one of the newer features of the congress, the forum on fundamental surgical problems, which will hold daily sessions designed to bring out the new and experimental in surgery and to give younger surgeons doing original work a chance to be heard.

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Much of the regional history of Minnesota and North Dakota over the last 100 years is interwoven in the chronicle of a religious order, "On Good Ground" by Sister Helen Angela Hurley, to be published Saturday (Nov. 3) by the University of Minnesota Press.

The book tells the story of the Sisters of St. Joseph in the province of St. Paul from the time four of the nuns arrived from St. Louis on a Mississippi river steamboat at the frontier landing of St. Paul in November, 1851, to the present.

Sister Helen Angela, the author, received a regional writing fellowship from the University of Minnesota for assistance in doing the research for the book. In the foreword, the Rev. William Busch of the St. Paul seminary points out that the history is "a rehearsal of a goodly part of the effort that went into the upbuilding of our state of Minnesota, especially in the fields of religion and charity and education".

Publication of the book coincides with the centennial anniversary celebration of the provincial order. The story recounts the founding and growth of many of the order's educational and charitable institutions in the Catholic diocese of St. Paul and the archdiocese of Fargo, N. D. There are detailed accounts, particularly, of the development of St. Joseph's academy, St. Joseph's hospital, the Long Prairie Indian mission, and the College of St. Catherine. The chapters on St. Catherine's, significant in the history of higher education, show how this college set high academic standards which influenced other Catholic colleges in the region, specifically in the matter of accreditation by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Woven through much of the narrative is the story of the Ireland family, long dominant in the religious community. There is much biographical material on John Ireland, the first archbishop of St. Paul, his sister, Ellen Ireland, who became Sister Seraphine, and their cousin, Ellen Howard, who became Sister Celestine.

Sister Helen Angela has been a part of the story she tells for more than 25 years. She is a graduate of the College of St. Catherine, received the master's degree from the University of Minnesota, and the doctor of philosophy degree from the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C.

She has taught at numerous Catholic schools and other institutions, including Derham hall, the College of St. Catherine, St. Joseph's academy, St. Joseph's hospital and the Diocesan Teachers' college, all of St. Paul; St. Margaret's academy, Holy Angels academy, and St. Mary's hospital, Minneapolis; St. John's academy, Jamestown, N. D.; St. James' academy, Grand Forks, N. D., and the College of St. Teresa, Kansas City, Mo. She also taught in the public high schools at Perham and at Fairmount, N. D.

The book is illustrated with photographs and drawings, and a design symbolic of the order and its work was drawn for the book jacket by Miss Lilamae Wick, 5232 Minnehaha avenue, Minneapolis, a graduate of St. Margaret's academy and of the College of St. Catherine and at present a teacher in the parochial schools of Minneapolis. A frontispiece map, also drawn by Miss Wick, shows the river route of the Sisters of St. Joseph from St. Louis to St. Paul in 1851 and the location of their permanent foundations in the St. Paul province.

(FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE)

Minneapolis ---Many Minnesota communities, as well as several in the Dakotas, figure in the history of a religious order, "On Good Ground", by Sister Helen Angela Hurley, which will be published Saturday (Nov. 3) by the University of Minnesota Press. The book gives the story of one hundred years' activities of the Sisters of St. Joseph in the province of St. Paul, which includes the Catholic diocese of St. Paul and the archdiocese of Fargo, N. D.

Because the chronicle reflects much of the regional history of the area where the nuns have carried on their educational and charitable work, Sister Helen Angela was awarded a Regional Writing Fellowship by the University of Minnesota for assistance in doing the research.

The list of places in which the order has maintained schools, hospitals, orphanages, and nursing homes is long. In some of these communities, the institutions are still in operation; in others they have been closed because of changing needs and conditions.

Communities where the Sisters of St. Joseph have had or still maintain institutions, listed in the chronological order of their establishment, include: Long Prairie, Mendota, Hastings, Stillwater, West St. Paul, Graceville, Waverly, Winona, Jamestown, N.D.; Superior, Wis.; Avoca, Anoka, Bird Island, Marshall, Fargo, N.D.; Fulda, Iona, LeSueur, Ghent, Grand Forks, N.D.; Kilkenny, Watertown, S.D.; Le Center, St. Peter, Olivia, White Bear, North St. Paul, Hopkins, Lemmon, S.D.; Minneota, Richfield, and St. Paul Park.

The College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, and numerous academies, high schools, grade schools and hospitals are maintained by the order in the Twin Cities.

The author, a member of the order, is a graduate of the College of St. Catherine, received the master's degree from the University of Minnesota, and the doctor of philosophy degree from the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C.

She has taught at Derham hall, the College of St. Catherine, St. Joseph's academy, and the Diocesan Teachers' college, St. Paul; St. Margaret's academy, Holy Angels academy, and St. Mary's hospital, Minneapolis; St. John's academy, Jamestown, N. D.; St. James' academy, Grand Forks, N.D.; the College of St. Teresa, Kansas City, Mo., and the public high schools at Perham and at Fairmount, N.D.

Three spokesmen for the European Union of Federalists will speak at the University of Minnesota Thursday (Nov. 1). The program, a panel discussion open to the public, will be held at 3:30 p.m. in Murphy hall auditorium.

The visitors are Henri Frenay, leader of the French federalists; Eugen Kogan, German writer who heads his country's council of the European movement and is president of the central committee of the European Union of Federalists; and Altiero Spinelli of the Italian federalists, a leading backer for a constitutional European union.

In their campus lecture, the trio will discuss problems European countries face in forming a union.

The group arrived in New York Oct. 22 to appear in 11 American cities under sponsorship of the American Committee on United Europe -- an organization founded by ex-OSS chief Gen. William S. Donovan.

Organizations which Frenay, Kogan and Spinelli represent are parts of the European movement -- a coordinating body for all union-minded groups in England and Europe formed under Winston Churchill's leadership in 1949. These groups are working to speed the growth of the Council of Europe from a consultative United Nations-type assembly into a political body with real powers.
