$2,000 Blaze Hits Chem Lab

Fifteen months of work and an estimated $2,000 worth of equipment were virtually destroyed when a rectification column burned last night in a Chemistry building basement laboratory.

The column, with attached recording apparatus, was being used in a problem involving the rectification of isopropyl alcohol in water when an electric arc from a pump motor ignited an overflow of alcohol.

Initiative for action on the University medical school's request for 10 dogs from the animal rescue league of Minneapolis has been returned to the medical school.

Yesterday Dr. R. L. West, executive secretary of the state livestock sanitary board, told the school that it was up to the University to get a mandamus ordering the league to turn dogs over to the medical school.

Before the court order can be obtained, West said, the medical school will have to prove that the league has the 10 dogs with which to fill the order.

Dr. William Kubicek, in charge mental purposes, placed the origsaid, a "trial balloon" to test the new state law which requires that city pounds turn over dogs to experimental purposes.

The league refused to answer the request for awhile. Dr. Kubicek waited and then sent a letter to the state livestock sanitary board. Dr. R. L. West, secretary of the board, took the matter up with the attorney general and sent a letter to the rescue league.

The outcome of the letter to the league was an official announcehave strengthened the communist cause more effectively than the ment in which the league declared that it was a private institution failure of the United States and the UN to act in a case of such and not a city pound. The results of statistical research carried on several years ago seemed to indicate that polio was more frequent in patients with dental cares or cavities.

Researchers examined the incident of polio in children and found that those with cavities contracted polio more than children with few cavities.

More recent research showed that dental decay played no part in the incident of polio in children coming from similar environment. Socio-economic factors seemed more important.

It was this research, Dr. Mc-Bride said, that led he and Dr. Syverton to perform actual laboratory experiments.

A Challenge to Help

To the Editor:

The problem posed by the early arrival on campus of 18 Austrian students referred to in the July 11 Daily is a challenging one. It could be solved easily, however, by simple means.

The Austrian students who are to enroll for the second summer session need help with respect to their expenses for board and room. This is what we could do:

On a designated day this week-say tomorrow or Thursday-we could establish a board and room scholarship for the 18 Austrian students. It would be most effective if such an undertaking were sponsored by the veterans now in school, backed by the Daily. The fund could be

On the scholarship fund day each class, as its first business, could elect a veteran or other member as its agent to collect and deliver its contribution, made and counted then and there, to an ad hoc scholarship fund committee sitting at a convenient place. Each class agent would receive a receipt from the fund committee for the amount delivered which would be his proof of the fulfillment of his mission.

If each student now enrolled, and each faculty member, would contribute $1. a scholarship fund would be established sufficient to place the Austrian students in Pioneer and Comstock halls for the remainder of 1950. The fund could be replenished by a fund-day drive during the fall term, if necessary.

If such a fund were established by the student body, the Austrian students would have at least a small measure of security as a reward for their hopes. They would have an opportunity to orient themselves by becoming familiar with our habits and customs before having to find other means of support.

> Paul E. Koefod, Veteran graduate student

Editor's note: The Daily congratulates Koefod on a fine idea. However, the lack of time and administrative difficulties make it impossible to carry out this plan now. The Daily will be glad to act as a collecting agency, though, and will remit all money collected to George B. Risty, director of bureau of loans and scholarships. We will be glad to keep the students informed on the progress of the collections.

Report from England

Spanners Start on Projects

This is the third in a series of articles from the Daily's reporter with the University SPAN group in England-dated July 10.

By Marcia Morrison

LONDON-(Special to the Minnesota Daily)-Each University Spanner is industriously working on his project relatively unconcerned about the war hysteria he hears from home.

We seem to have caught the mood of the English people, who are fully aware of the situation but are not afraid of another world conflict.

The English believe that the United States is doing its best to promote world peace, and there isn't much talk of a general war. Although we are somewhat discouraged by the letters from home, we are continuing our talks with the man on the road, in the tube and in the pubs. This week University Spanners Don Salper, Ruth Ann Weesner, Bettye Ruth Bryan and Lucy Schwartz have gone to Hampshire to spend some time with English families there and to work on their topics.

Salper's topic is the educational programming of the British Broadcasting corporation; Miss Weesner, housing; Miss Bryan, the nationalized transport industry; Miss Schwartz, socialized medicine.

Sally VanValkenberg, University Spanner, will go to Brechin, Scotland, on July 16 to assist and observe at the Streathro hospital. This hospital is one of the most advanced in its training of student nurses. Miss Van-Valkenberg, herself a graduate nurse, is studying nurses training in Britain.

I straightened out some of the tangles in my own project the other day. While studying the campaign techniques of the Conservative party, I had found it almost impossible to contact Lord Woolton, party chairman.

So after he gave a speech at St. Pancras hall I rushed backstage to ask him for an interview. Woolton was quite shocked to meet a reporter backstage, but he listened to my pleas.

They were answered the next day when Lord Woolton's secretary called me to make an appointment for July 27. This interview will be an important phase of my project.

All of us attended the American Ambassador's Fourth of July reception at the embassy residence in Prince's Gate. Over 3,000 Americans were there, including Jack Benny and Frank Sinatra. We also saw Aly Kahn leading a monstrous dog around the grounds.

Session's Second Largest Audience Attends Concert

By Arnold Rosenberg Daily Music Critic

An audience, numbering well over 3,000, heard a program by the Summer Session orchestra Friday evening in Northrop auditorium. This, according to James Lombard, director of the department of concerts and lectures, was the second largest attendance at these concerts

The attractive program, plus the novelty of hearing and seeing

> Benjamin Britten's "Matinees Musicales," which closed the program, was a charming and happy novelty. This is a circusy arrangement of Rossini melodies which already were at home in a circus before Britten got his hands on them.

The rest of the program was Weill's "Down in the Valley" will standard, consisting of Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, the dances from Borodin's "Prince Igor," "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy and Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor"

Dean Morse Tells

How to Stay an Instructor

This is the second story on a satirical article by H. T. Morse, dean of general college, which appeared in the July 1 issue of School and Society, educational weekly. The first story was carried in Friday's Dean Morse assures college teachers of "a long and self-gratifying career as an instructor or assistant professor, if his suggestions are followed:

Most of these suggestions, he advises, are "tried and true in practice through which college teachers may enhance their academic respectability and secure deference that should be accorded to their exalted and profound calling."

Dean Morse says he may have left out other devices "which have proved eminently successful" but readers should be able to add their own.

College instructors should cultivate "academic respectability" in three areas—examinations, studentinstructor relationships and professional relationships, Dean Morse says.

He offers two more suggestions in the field of college testing:

 Never grade examination papers immediately. Give a test the day of, or the day after "an allcollege rally, party or athletic festival."

If exam papers cool off, the instructor "can get a

It is a good policy too, Dean Morse says, to look at the name of the student before grading the paper. This will insure "a consistency in grading-technically, reliability," because the instructor can decide "about what mark" the student will get.

"It is positively amazing how often your prediction is borne out exactly," writes Dean Morse.

By giving tests around homecoming the instructor can "insure a seriousness of purpose on the part of students."

"It also helps to mark you as a campus personality-or character of consequence.'

And if a teacher really wants to acquire a high degree of academic respectability he never should give A's "and hand out a lot of flunks."

This, assures Dean Morse, will "show your standards are high.'

- Using a biting satire, Dean Morse tells his colleagues how to insure academic respectability among the students.

Every instructor should "create in students-undergraduates especially-a measure of proper respect and awe for your euridition" by always using the lecture method.

"The lecture is a time-honored and traditional device. There certainly is no logic in discarding it in favor of newfangled 'methods.' Use the lecture method so your students will realize they are in college and not still in high school."

Dean Morse lists these hints to enhance the lecture

· Remain seated while lecturing;

· Lower your voice "to keep students alert;"

Keep your head down and eyes fixed on notes;

· Pay no attention to the final bell-and give assignments then too, for this will "insure the serious student's getting it while the frivolous ones rush off to another class-or something."

Teachers can add to their own stature, writes the dean, by cutting down student opinion of other teachers.

"Capitalize upon any errors they may have made," he writes, "in such discriminate items as their use of punctuation in footnotes.

"Affect shocked surprise when a student cites another instructor. Just raise your eyebrows and say, with the proper emphasis, 'Did Professor Jones say
