STRIKE FOR PEACE

11:30-A.M. APRIL 22nd ≡

FELLOW STUDENTS:

No interlude of peaceful years lies before us; war is being made today and tomorrow and in the coming months. To stop that war demands a more dynamic and unyielding action than ever before.

American students do not want another world War. To this we have testified in countless resolutions, in mobilizations, in previous strikes against war. It is the issue of effectiveness, of strategy, of organization that is now of transcending importance.

Two years ago our strike was primarily an educational gesture, focusing the attention of students on the peril of the world they inhabit. Today it has matured to the point of power. The events that will test that power and the clarity of its application are alarmingly self-evident. War threatens in outer Mongolia, and the Rhineland; it is already raging in Ethiopia. And our own government indicates its war plans by a billion dollar armaments budget.

The time has passed for passive abhorrence to war or a debating-society approach to it. Nothing can replace the strike, whose essence is that it is a dress rehearsal for the fateful conflicts to come. Strike today and be counted among those who will resist the next war?

The strike is a rehearsal for the future. It is also a tremendous influence on those fronts where our present day anti-war actions are being waged. With genuine neutrality circumvented, a strike of 350,000 students for the principle of no loans, credits or supplies to belligerents will indicate that at least the student population of the United States has learned the lessons of the Nye inquiry.

This is no altruistic crusade. It is a fight for our lives. It demands not pious lip service to peace, not merely renewed declaration of our desire for peace, but immediate courageous action whose meaning will be plain to the instigators of war. This is the role of the student strike against war: to unite students of all faiths, all colors and all creeds in one mighty assertion of their powers and determination.
