CURA Research Reports on Underrepresented Groups Based on CURA Research Projects, 1968–2000

The Center for Urban and Regional Affairs (CURA) at the University of Minnesota is an independent applied research and technology center that connects faculty and students with nonprofit organizations, ethnic and racial minority groups, inner-city neighborhoods, suburban communities, rural towns, businesses, local governments, and public agencies in Minnesota. In 2001 we are celebrating our 34th year helping to bring the resources of higher education institutions to community agencies and organizations throughout the state.

CURA works across disciplinary lines and professional boundaries, creating new programs and supporting projects that meet needs that no one else is meeting. Our staff leverages resources by collaborating with other University units.

CURA's mission includes

- assisting faculty and students to produce more relevant research on critical issues in Minnesota
- providing students the opportunity to strengthen their education through practical experience
- helping government agencies and community organizations get the research and personnel assistance they request

Results of many CURA research projects appear in articles in our quarterly publication, the CURA Reporter. CURA also publishes monographs about many of the projects it supports. Besides these official CURA publications, there are reports concerning CURA-sponsored projects that have not been reviewed by CURA. Some of these were written by student research assistants and have not been published; others were published by an agency other than CURA. All types of reports are included in this list of reports on historically underrepresented groups. By the year 2000, CURA had sponsored over 400 projects dealing with these groups.

Number of CURA reports by group

Reports on racial/ethnic groups

African American	35
American Indian	137
Asian American	42
Latino	15
Multicultural	88
TOTAL	317

Reports on other underrepresented groups (some reports also included in above groups)

Aging/Seniors	53
People with Disabilities	8
Women	50

Reports are listed for each group with the most recent report first. The date, title, author, number of pages, and keywords are shown for each report. More complete information for each report is available by title in the CURA publications catalog at <http://www.cura.umn.edu/search.html>.

How to obtain publications

In its effort to share the information gathered from the projects it sponsors, CURA provides copies of up to five reports free of charge, with a limit of 200 pages of photocopies when reports are out of print. To order reports, contact CURA at 612/625-1551 or cura@umn.edu and request reports by title. Orders can also be placed through CURA's online publications catalog at <http://www.cura.umn.edu/search.html>. Reports issued after 2000 are listed in the online catalog.
