"When I became involved in the peace and disarmament movement in 1962 and faced the fact that we are all at the mercy of the military-industrial complex (and its auxiliaries - congress, labor and the press), when I recognized that the war in Vietnam is only one episode in the tireless effort of American industry and government to increase their control over other parts of the earth, I decided that we are not likely to save the world by attempting to reform the old parties, which are financially so indebted to business, but must build a new political movement that will be unambiguously anti-imperialist and responsive to human needs."
