UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA, DULUTH
FACULTY MEETING, NOVEMBER 25, 1969

The Faculty convened in Science 200 at 3:40 p.m. with Provost Darland presiding. About 85 faculty members were present.

Provost Darland: The Provost opened the discussion on the Long Range Plan which the Long Range Planning Committee--Purpose and Scope was reporting to the faculty for information. While he had some personal criticism of the plan, the Provost stressed that the report was a "working document" and a "springboard for change." He said the Central Administration in Minneapolis has been making repeated demands on UMD for such a plan which would in turn contribute to the total University Long-Range Plan. The Provost urged faculty members to return their ballots with their judgments on the plan to Anna L. Stensland, Faculty Secretary, promptly.

Dean Chamberlin: Thomas W. Chamberlin, chairman of the reporting committee, expressed his appreciation to both the special committee and the standing committee which had labored on the plan and provided a brief history of its inception and development. Dean Chamberlin also stressed the need for a program of continuous re-evaluation and planning, of which this plan was merely the beginning. He indicated that faculty critiques and suggestions would go to the Committee for study.

Members of the Committee: Four members of the Committee (Thomas G. Boman, Richard W. Ojakangas, Helmut J. Schweiger, David A. Vose) expressed personal support of the plan. They too argued that the plan was essential, urgent, and subject to change.

Open discussion by the faculty followed. Some of the questions and answers are reported below:

Q.: What happens after the faculty approves the plan? A.: The plan and the faculty vote will be conveyed to the Central Administration in Minneapolis. The Committee should inform the administration and faculty about the nature of faculty suggestions which are submitted. The UMD Faculty Council will have special interest in all suggestions from the faculty. (R. W. Darland)

Q.: What is the place of UMD in the planning for the University of Minnesota and other state educational institutions? A.: The UMD Committee was primarily concerned with the future growth and development of UMD. However, the All-University Long Range Plan Committee, on which Robert L. Heller is the UMD representative, will incorporate the UMD plan in its own study and report. (T. W. Chamberlin, R. W. Darland, R. L. Heller)

Q.: Why does the plan provide for so large and comprehensive an organization as the proposed College of Arts and Sciences? A.: Representatives of the sciences were consulted and preferred to be so included. (T. W. Chamberlin)

Q.: How binding is the mail ballot? If we vote approval, are we bound by the plan? A.: The plan may well have defects, but it reflects the outlook of the large number of faculty members and students who participated. The philosophy of the plan is the philosophy of the entire faculty, but no faculty member should feel bound by the plan. (T. W. Chamberlin)

Q.: The philosophy of the plan, expressed on p. 6, is defective. Also the planned administrative organization is unbalanced, giving such agencies as ROTC and University police undeserved co-ordinate status with more important organs. A.: No exact parallels are intended. The plan merely seeks to present subgroupings of like activities. (T. W. Chamberlin)

Q.: What is the significance of the Director of Research and Development?
Comment: The plan cannot really be regarded as merely a "working document." Attempts will be made to fill the positions provided in the plan, so it has considerable firmness and inflexibility. I can support the plan only if the alternative is no plan. The lack of budget is a fatal defect in the Research and Development office. (S. D. Burgstahler)

Q.: The College of Arts and Sciences may be crushed by the surrounding administrative structure. What importance is to be attached to the black boxes enclosing certain administrative offices? A.: This is primarily a device to assure greater legibility. The provision for administrators is not excessive. (T. W. Chamberlin)

Q.: The functions of the various administrators are not defined. Why is there no statement about their responsibilities in the plan? Specifically, what are the duties of the Provost under the new plan? A.: The Committee decided against detailed definition of the various posts as unwise at this stage. As to the Provost, he would doubtless focus on routine operation of UMD, freeing the Chancellor for other problems, including the relations between the Duluth campus and Minneapolis. (T. W. Chamberlin, D. A. Vose)

Q.: What will the Committee do with suggestions for modification or revision from the faculty? A.: It is not possible to alter this plan at this time. UMD has to respond now to urgent requests from Minneapolis for a long-range plan. Failure to do so will result in serious injury to growth and expansion of this campus. (T. W. Chamberlin) Q.: Then, when will faculty ideas for modifying plan be incorporated? A.: The Committee can issue new reports annually and submit them to Minneapolis. (T. W. Chamberlin) Q.: Could not faculty consensus for modification be incorporated in this present plan? A.: This would require a rewriting of the plan. (T. W. Chamberlin)

Q.: Many faculty members have reservations about the plan. Could there not be delay and further study and discussion? A.: These objections have all been considered in the Committee. There must be a long-range plan, and if the faculty are to have had a voice in it, the plan must be this one. (D. A. Vose) Concerned faculty may provide their ideas and suggestions to the Committee by completing the second sheet attached to the mail ballot. (F. T. Witzig)

In response to reminders of the Thanksgiving holidays, the Provost supported the suggestion that the deadline for ballots be extended to 4:00 p.m. Wednesday, December 3.

Respectfully submitted,

J. F. Maclear
