Crookston Students for Sustainable Development Sponsor Cooking Class

By Elizabeth Tollefson on Friday, December 11, 2015 Students had an opportunity to learn how to prepare delicious, healthy foods from local sources during a class sponsored by Crookston Students for Sustainable Development (CSSD) at the University of Minnesota Crookston. Vicki Svedarsky, who taught the class, is a wonderful cook, proponent of whole foods and healthy eating, and former cooking instructor at the high school. The class was held in the classroom in Centennial Hall on the campus.

Vicki and her husband, Professor Dan Svedarsky, put students to work cutting and preparing the potatoes and everyone got to share a delicious meal at the end of the evening. CSSD hopes to make the class a regular event and partner with other groups and individuals to cover a wide range of topics.
